Tonight's Episode: Toys Take Charge

I am so completely unqualified for this.

I spent my college years preparing for the worst. All aspiring journalists end up at small newspapers, covering the duller drudgery imaginable. Obituaries. School board meetings. Police blotters.

Now I work for a magazine where superhero dolls pound Jawas into bloody stains with big mallets. That's journalism, baby!

I'm still a journalist, but now I'm a toy journalist. There are a few key differences. In the real world, the Middle East peace process is big big news. In the toy world, Electro-Spark Captain America's sucky shield is big big news. In the real world, publications herald the arrival of a new U.S. president. In the toy world, publications herald the arrival of a new Star Wars: Power of the Force Panda Baba.

Like most adults, I reached a point in my childhood when I left toys behind. For me, it came when I brought my Transformers notebook to school one day. "Transformers rock!" I said. "Shut up, sissy-boy," my peers sneered. That was about all the encouragement I needed to chuck Optimus Prime's ass into the back of the closet.

Now I'm older, and the toys I left behind are inescapable. Around here, the toys run things. The ToyFare office is crammed with the suckers, and more of 'em show up in big boxes every damn day. All I do all day long is play with toys, write about toys, and call people on the phone to talk about...toys. Lunchtime consists of forays to the local toy store, searching for elusive action figures so we can bring 'em back to the office and tear 'em open. Maybe throw 'em around. Maybe break 'em. Maybe melt 'em into charred quack for a photo shoot.

That's toy journalism. The weird thing is, I'm really gaining respect for the little buggers. I think you have to when they take on such importance in your day-to-day existence. Although our entire take on toys seems to be one of complete disrespect, the opposite is true. We're serious about the hobby and we're serious about our coverage. Funny captions aside, we treat toys with great reverence around here. And no matter how much gastrointestinal humor we throw in, we sure do love them toys. I think it shows.

Somewhere, right this minute, one of my college peers is sitting in the longest city council meeting of his or her life, praying the building falls down, a bomb goes off, ANYTHING to end the suffering. And I'm drilling a hole in my Elektro figure so she can re-enact her classic Batman death scene with my Bullseye figure.

Now that's journalism, baby.

HOT BLOOD, COLD PLASTIC

To outsiders, toy collecting seems like a reasonably sedate hobby. After all, toys are fun and colorful, and anything meant for Kids must be inherently pure and good. Therefore, onlookers regard collecting toys as a relatively peaceful pursuit.

Toy enthusiasts, on the other hand, view each trip to the toy store as a potential bloodbath; an all-out, all-bets-are-off contest of champions in which the winner takes home Gene Simmons and the losers take home their teeth in a paper bag. Or worse, Attack R5-D4.

Yep, toy people are angry, violent folk. Think I'm Kidding? Read on...

Hello ToyFare,

My name is Michael Morales and I am a native New Yorker. It just so happens that I love toys—not for this degraded “sport” of buying and selling (a tactic which these so-called collectors are using to kill this hobby), but for the sheer euphoric delight of waiting for the toy to be released, then opening and enjoying the toy.

One day, my friend Paul gave me a tip on where to get the latest Star Wars figures. It was at a Toys R Us off Route 80 in New Jersey. When I got there, I found that the infamous Aisle 7C was wiped out, and I politely asked a stockboy for help. He obliged, and brought me a case of the figures.

As he handed me a Grand Moff Tarkin figure, some [expletive] redneck bastard snatched it out of my hands! Without thinking, I snatched it back. He pushed me, I leapt on him like I'm Wolverine, and a battle ensued. As shocking as that was, what was even more shocking was the help I got—there wasn't any! The poor little stockboy ran off like a girl. Sissy!

I want the people who read this magazine to see this as a sign of the times. Why did this happen? It didn't need to. There are selfish people like this out there every day hunting for toys, and this type of selfishness needs to stop. For those of you who make your living doing this, you have my sympathies. When this hobby is dead, blame only yourselves.

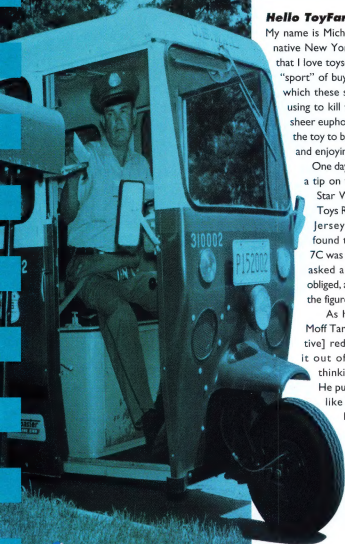

Mike Morales
New York, NY

I happen to know that this whole story is true. Why? If it had been a fabrication, Mike's Tarkin would've been snatched by THREE guys, all wearing varsity football jackets. Mike would've growled something clever, like, “Hope you boys missed lunch, ‘cause it's time for a fist dinner.” The scene would've ended with the three bullies in a battered heap, a 12-inch Greedo sticking out of their every orifice.

Since we've established the story is indeed true, it begs the question, “What the hell is wrong with people?” Don't expect this next letter to clear anything up...

Dear ToyFare,

The rampant destruction of toys in your magazine has compelled me to confess. I got sick of all the girls at my high school squealing over those freaking McDonald's Beanie Babies, so I bought all of them I could find (the Beanie Babies, not the girls), gutted them and stuck their pelts on my bookbag. That didn't go over well with the girls, but nobody messed with me for the remainder of the year.

Chris Curenton
chaplin1@mindspring.com

Y'know, girls love Kittens, too, Chris. Don't get any ideas

Dear ToyFare,

I have one thing to say to anyone who hoards figures and sells them for profit:

Remember the sports card market during the late '80s? Now, remember the comic book market during the last few years? Well, it's YOU, the same no-talent, sphincter-sucking MORONS, that devastated both of these markets! It won't be long before this artificially created market crumbles down around all of you and those who support your greed and shortsightedness. I can't wait to see every one of you businessman wannabes trying to sell Slave Girl Leias out of the back of your broken-down pickup trucks while your wives and children rifle through dumpsters, looking for food. I will NEVER support these LOCUSTS, and I hope that those who do will soon see the damage they are causing this once-great hobby! One more thing: An unwrapped toy is a tear in one child's eye. FOR GOD'S SAKE, TAKE THEM OUT AND (gasp) PLAY WITH THE DAMN THINGS! The greatest part of figure collecting for me is seeing my 2-year-old son playing with the modern-day version of my old Star Wars collection. If he happens to be a little rough with them, oh well! The New Mexico landscape is littered with the corpses of tiny Stormtroopers and Jawas from my younger days!

Tim Tobias
San Diego, CA
TOBIASSTK@aol.com

"An unwrapped toy is a tear in one child's eye?" Let's not get carried away here. Going to bed at 8:30 is a tear in one child's eye. They cry over anything.

There's a valid argument amidst the locusts and dumpster-rifling above. There is a growing fear in the secondary market—on both sides of the sales counter—that the toy boom is merely a giant house of cards. And like the speculator market that preceded it, most notably comics, the crash is going to really, really sting.

The point can't be made often enough: Hobbies inflated by financial interest instead of affection are bound to fail. Chromium cover, anyone?

The Man of Cash...

...and the Man of Aus

Hola Juguete Gente,

Has anyone else noticed that the new Dengar face from Star Wars: Power of the Force resembles that of American outlaw legend Johnny Cash? Tell me I'm lyin'. Whoever sculpted that figure was either a genius or a madman.

Cortez Love
cortezlove@hotmail.com

I'm not gonna be the one tellin' the original Man in Black that his likeness ended up on a bandaged pile of dog ass like Dengar. While we're on the subject, does the fact that a bloated, pathetic mummy like Dengar actually SAVED Boba Fett post-Sarlacc Pit mean—gasp!—Fett might be LAMER than Dengar? I think it might.

Hey ToyFolks,

As a self-confessed "unabashed Star Wars fanboy" myself, I found one, and maybe two, errors in Matthew Senreich's "Creature Feature" article in ToyFare #1.

1) He calls both Zuckuss and Ree-Yees "Gands." This is interesting, given that one's a big bug and one's a three-eyed goat. In fact, Ree-Yees is a "Gran," not a Gand.

2) He states that Trandoshans come from Kashyyyk, which is also the home planet of Wookiees. Now, I've read a lot of Star Wars fiction, and it's been established that there is a lot of antipathy between the two species, but I've never seen anything that said Trandoshans were also from Kashyyyk. What's your source on this, Matt?

Mike Mistele
MJMistele@aol.com

1) That wasn't Senreich's fault, it was a slip-up in the editing department. And yes, Ree-Yees is a Gran, not a Gand.

2) While the Trandoshans and the Wookiees share the same solar systems, they do not share the same home planet. Wookiees hail from Kashyyyk. Trandoshans from (oh, clever) Trandosha. Our source is the excellent Star Wars: The Essential Guide to Characters by Andy Mangels. We screwed up that one too.

Dear ToyFare,

How can I get a bag of Iszs?

Daniel Locke
Denver, CO

According to Chet Jacques, McFarlane Toys Collector's Club director, you can still get those Iszs—you're just going to have to work a bit harder for 'em. The bag of Iszs, a longtime Collector's Club exclusive, was recently dropped in favor of some new booty. Jacques suggests visiting the McFarlane booth at upcoming comic conventions; he promises they still have plenty of those lil' guys to unload.

Dear ToyFare,

What is the best way to store mint-on-card figures? I know that acid in cardboard boxes is killer on comic books, but what materials should the average collector steer away from when storing figures over time? What kind of boxes should be used? I enjoy displaying loose figures but like many collectors I buy doubles of figures I like; one to open and one to save. But I want to preserve my carded figures so that they'll still look new in 10 or 20 years. How about showing me how?

J. Travis Bayne
ZDarkness@aol.com

The key to preserving carded figures, just as with comics, is to keep them out of the light in a cool place with controlled humidity. Under these optimum conditions, your carded figures should last a good long time. But not forever. According to Bill Cole, collectibles preservation whiz from Bill Cole Enterprises Inc. [http://www.neponset.com/bcemylar], the biggest problem with storing carded fig-

TOYFARE'S AOL POLL

Keeping with our Halloween theme this issue, we asked our America Online pals to help us pick the scariest toy ever made. On top of that, we thought it'd be fun to find out who y'all would like to see munch on by a monster. Check it out:

What is the SCARIEST toy ever made?

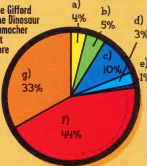

- a) Sansker (Spawn Series 6)
- b) Venom (Spider-Man Web Splasers)
- c) Alien (from the movie "Alien," natch)
- d) Scarecrow (Batman: Legends of the Dark Knight)
- e) The Freak (Spawn Series 6)
- f) Predator (Kenner)
- g) Other

Well, some pretty widely dispersed votes, but when you study the data closer, McFarlane Toys products clattered the competition. The Freak whopped butt, with Sansker showing respectable numbers. But the write-ins leaned heavily toward McFarlane as well, with several votes for the Hunchback. Scarlet Spider even made a big showing—wiseasses.

Who would you MOST want to see devoured by a scary monster?

- a) Kathie Lee Giffard
- b) Barney the Dinosaur
- c) Joel Schumacher
- d) Bob Saget
- e) Pauly Shore
- f) Hanson
- g) Other

Holy MMBMB! Where's the love? Hanson took it on the chin ("Die you bastards, die!") "Batman and Robin" auteur Joel Schumacher didn't have much luck either. Still lots of ire directed at Barney ("That purple tube sock must die") as well as Kathie Lee ("Spit her up and eat her again!") The write-ins were all over the map, however, with scads of votes demanding "All of the above!" The Spice Girls made a healthy write-in showing (but they're so cute!) as well as Howard Stern and, in the wake of Princess Diana's death, the paparazzi in general.

ures is the plastic inner blister holding the toy in place. "Each manufacturer has its own formula [for inner blisters], but basically that plastic is a PVC [polyvinyl chloride] that will break down and migrate onto the surface of the card over time," Cole says. The plastic, then, will eventually degrade the card.

Most collectors have taken to wrapping a one-mil Mylar sleeve around their carded figures, sealing it with a piece of tape, and calling it good, Cole says. Under "utopian conditions"—dry, cool and out of the light—the figures will hold up nicely for a long time.

If you're less concerned about the long-term value, and more concerned with preserving the toys for children or grandchildren, Cole suggests removing the plastic blister and putting the card and the toy in separate Mylar sleeves. Without the blister, the figure and card can survive indefinitely.

Dear Wizard Toy Guys,

In your September edition's "Market Watch" you said if you are really careful, you can peel off the hologram on Star Wars: Power of the Force cards—which is true. But most of the time, you rip the hell out of the packaging.

A toy dealer told me this trick to get the holograms to come off without so much hassle: Turn a hair dryer on low, and heat up the back of the package for about half a minute. This melts the adhesive on the hologram. Can't anyone at Kenner (or anyone else in the Star Wars Universe) count?

In ToyFare #1, Hasbro's Vinnie D'Alleva seems to think that the Cantina Band has "six guys in the band, not five." Bah! Try SEVEN! No one seems to have noticed the currently unnamed (I'd call him Djal K'ten) percussionist.

If you folks could let Vinnie know, all of us insane Star Wars fans would appreciate it. Oota Goot!

Mark J. Johnson
Salt Lake City, UT

Well, here's the picture Mark sent along. Readers will have to make up their own minds—is that a seventh band member, or simply a misplaced bar patron? We're apt to side with D'Alleva. Hasbro New Ventures' director of marketing, on this one, after all, he's the one with the experts at Lucasfilm behind him.

Zach's Backyard

Every month, one letter will be answered by Zach Malamute, official ToyFare spokesdog and America's favorite Malamute for four years running!

ToyFare:

I just picked up your new magazine. What a disappointment. The biggest turn-off was the ethnic slur against Greece. ToyFare #1—in the section dedicated to a dog ["Like bad men Zach hear about in Greece."]. Your dog implies that Greeks are bad men. What type of nonsense is that? I did not get it and I felt it was prejudicial. I will no longer buy your magazine. I wonder if next issue you'll let your spokesdog bad-mouth China, Italy, Ireland or those of African-American heritage.

Panos Gerakis
Good Man of Greek Descent

Zach thrust into political arena! Panos no understand that Zach make joke. Zach sorry if Zach make Greeks angry. Zach no want Greeks mad at Zach. Zach like gyros Zach no can pronounce "gyros." Zach also think Olivia Newton-John looked hot at end of "Grease." Zach no understand why they no put "Stranded at the Drive-in" on "Grease" soundtrack. And why John Travolta so fat now? Zach think he eat too many gyros. Zach once ate too many gyros and threw up. Zach feel better then, but then Zach feel hungry again. So Zach ate throw-up and Zach felt better. Zach hope you feel better now too.

Dear Purveyors of Mayhem,

Ian of Fugazi summed it up best when he said, "It doesn't matter what you're selling. It's what they're buying." Our collections have no intrinsic value. Should the market collapse, plastic is a rather worthless material. At best, we leave our amassed "wealth" to someone else who can only do the same. "He who dies with the most toys...STILL DIES."

Rob Stangle
E-mail: fog@lucent.com

What a perfect end to a thoroughly depressing letters column. We had fights in the action figure aisles, kids gutting Beanie Babies and just a lot of general unpleasantness. Then to top it all off, a guy writes in to remind us we're all gonna die. Beautiful.

Of course, we DID solve that hologram silliness. And even Johnny Cash paid us a visit! Maybe it wasn't such a bad day after all! See ya next month!

—Tom Root

ToyFare Copy Editor Tom Root, while stripped of his 1982 Mr. Universe title for posing nude in Playgirl, nonetheless holds himself with an air of dignity and respect. He also enjoys fudge.

ToyFare NEWS

GEN¹³ READY FOR ACTION!

There's a 'Storm on the action figure horizon!

Toys based on WildStorm comic book characters will arrive exclusively in the direct market in 1998, beginning with Gen¹³'s mega-popular Fairchild. After considering offers from several toy companies, WildStorm has elected to produce the figures itself. And if the studio is taking any specific approach to this new venture, it's "slow and steady wins the race."

"We're trying to start off with something relatively small," WildStorm President and founder Jim Lee said. "That way we can control the quality and distribution."

Lee said the WildStorm figures will eventually include J. Scott Campbell's heroine Danger Girl, a character from Lee's new Divine Right comic series, Backlash and most likely Fairchild's Gen¹³ gal-pal Freefall.

The toys will start as dealer incentives tied to the company's comic book titles. Fairchild will be available in conjunction with Gen¹³ #25 in December, with the figure shipping in April. Lee said WildStorm will mostly likely offer the second figure as an incentive for the upcoming WildCORE comic book title in February or March. New figures should be offered every other month, he said, and in late summer '98, all the figures will ship in a case of six.

Lee said the decision to sell the WildStorm figures in the direct market only is part of the company's gradual approach. "Toy stores generally won't take that kind of product without entertainment attached," he said. "And if they do take it, you sort of get relegated to a horrible position, a one-pag kind of thing."

But the kind of entertainment needed to survive in toy stores is on the way, in the form of the upcoming "Gen¹³" direct-to-video movie from Disney and the Electronic Arts Gen¹³ video game for the Sony PlayStation. Lee said once those properties are in place, there's a good chance for a transition from comic stores and hobby stores to toy stores. "Once we have the sculpts, we can do a number of things to make the mass-market ones different from the direct-market ones," Lee said.

Although several toy companies recently made bids to produce Gen¹³ figures, Lee said it made sense to keep the license at home. "We're going to go ahead and do it on our own, just because I think we'll have more control," he said. "It makes more sense for us to release a WildStorm line rather than just do a Gen¹³ line with this [company] or that [company]."

The WildStorm action figures will stand 6 inches tall, splitting the difference between the Toy Biz and McFarlane Toys scales. "We plan on really doing high-quality toys," Lee said.

Slowly but surely. ■ Torn Root

FAMOUS COVERS REVISITED

First, Toy Biz tackled Famous Covers. Now, it's going after Famous First Appearances.

With its fledgling line of 8-inch Mego-reminiscent action figures ready to hit toy shelves, Toy Biz is already back at the design table planning its next assortment set to debut in spring 1998—this time to include two high-profile Marvel Comics heroes, one iconic villain and a surprise heroine rendered for the first time in plastic.

"We're going to do 'first appearances' of some of the more famous Marvel characters as the theme for this year," said Toy Biz product manager Tom McCormack. "We're going to do Doctor Doom, Thor, Hellcat—who was one of the first females to have her own book—and the [Avengers #4 era] return of Captain America."

As in Toy Biz's Famous Covers assortment (Spider-Man, Green Goblin, Wolverine and Storm), McCormack is striving for vibrant—and authentic—cloth costumes and articulation to rival all other action figures currently on the market.

"For Dr. Doom, we might be doing flexible armor, so his joints can move and he's as poseable as the other characters. In addition, we're naturally doing rooted hair for Thor and Hellcat. Captain America will have a removable mask to reveal Steve Rogers beneath. And we're going to capture as much detail as possible in Cap's outfit. Instead of stitching his pants to the rest of the Spandex suit, they'll be a separate piece to make him more interesting and true to the character."

In addition, fans eager for action figure 'realism' can expect Thor to come with his trusty Uru hammer Mjolnir, and Cap to come with his indestructible shield. Look for all the characters to ship in March 1998 in gatefold boxes similar to the first Famous Covers assortment (check out page 16 for a peek!) on sale in November.

"I think once people see what we've done with the first series, they'll be even more excited by what we've got planned for the second,"

McCormack said. ■ The Toyfare Staff

FIGURE FACTOID

PACKAGING MISTAKES: BIG BUCKS OR TOUGH LUCK?

What is It?

Toy Biz's Shocker from its Spider-Man line. Note that Shockey is mistakenly packaged... upside down!!! OOPS!

What's the Deal?

As Toy Biz product manager Jesse Falcon explains, action figures occasionally have packaging flaws such as this vertigo-bound supervillain. "That kind of stuff is really unavoidable," says Falcon. "We made 250,000 pieces of the Shocker, and sometimes a few of the figures get packaged upside down."

How Does it Happen?

As Falcon explains, a heated press is used to literally "melt" a plastic blister onto its accompanying cardboard backing card (Imagine ironing your favorite shirt and you get the picture.) "The whole machine is encapsulated, and you don't actually get to see how the front of the card is positioned inside the mechanism. If you're not paying precise attention, it's not hard to have a mistake happen. I would say 20-50 pieces in each assortment of a character get packaged upside down. It happens across the board to all figures, including Batman and Spawn," he says.

Is It Worth More?

Generally speaking, goofs are goofs. The production process always begs a few flaws such as an upside-down figure, or even a figure on the wrong backing card entirely, but they're often worth less, not more. Since the package isn't definitively mint, Shockey and others like him can never be truly defined as Mint on Mint Card. Nevertheless, the figure inside is still A-okay, though he might be a lit' dizzy. A weird addition to your collection if you keep him in the package, but otherwise, merely a curiosity. ■ The Toyfare Staff

NAKED AMBITION

LIVE! NUDE! ACTION FIGURES??!

C'mon...fess up. You've probably taken a peek at Barbie's "hidden assets" at least once in your life. But when you check out what the new Hari Kari action figure's packin' under her costume, you're gonna get a real surprise.

Independent comic book publisher Blackout Comics will release the first-ever nude variant action figure, based on the star of their flagship comic, Hari Kari. The 6-inch figure comes with a sword and demonic shield, and the nude edition features a (ahem) breastplate that can be removed to reveal the heroine in all her glory. There will be a regular edition for $9.95, while the variant is limited to 5,000 pieces and will fetch $14.95.

Ironically, Hari Kari has never appeared nude in her comic book appearances, so why do a nude figure? "There's always a certain allure to be the first to do something," said Blackout publisher Bruce Schoengood. "It's not a pornographic doll. It's really very mild and it just serves as a variant collectible. It's not something a single guy should look forward to."

While it might make sense to the publisher, some retailers are worried about how the figure will go over. "I see a danger in this," said Joseph Thunderhorse, owner of Thunderhorse Originals in Florida. "I'm not the moral majority—I'm a guy who used to stash Playboy under my bed. There's no safe way to prevent this from getting into children's hands. It's the same deal for anything not meant for underage buyers, like with alcohol or pornographic material."

Schoengood claims that packaging for the variant will differ significantly to denote the figure is indeed for mature audiences. "The retailer has to be responsible for his merchandise, as long as it's clearly marked 'not for children.' We hope the retailers will be responsible." ■ Tom Palmer Jr.

WEBSITE OF THE MONTH

THE STAR WARS COLLECTORS ARCHIVE

<http://www.toysrgus.com>

Imagine visiting a museum filled from top to bottom with every Star Wars collectible known to man, from the easily obtained to the super-rare. Sounds cool, right? Well, it doesn't exist. But as a nifty substitute, check out the Star Wars Collectors Archive website, a close second to a real-life Star Wars museum.

SWCA is an exhaustive exhibition of Star Wars paraphernalia, including all the toys you knew about and mountains of neat stuff you've never seen before in your life. Photo after photo of foreign toys, prototypes, movie props, unproduced figures, store displays—it's a Star Wars geek's wet dream.

The site's founder, Gus Lopez, pays little attention to the new wave of Star Wars toys currently flooding stores. "The focus of it really is on the older items," he says. "I try to do things that aren't covered elsewhere, things that don't get as much coverage."

Lopez says the site has been in existence around three years, making it one of the first Star Wars websites and the very first Star Wars collecting site. The website averages around 14,000 visitors a month, Lopez says, although during the "Special Edition" movie re-releases earlier this year, the number more than doubled.

Despite the incredible volume of material contained in SWCA, Lopez says he still has a few Holy Grails. A Rebel Blackade Runner prototype exists out there somewhere, Lopez says, as does the prototype for a Lando Calrissian doll.

After all, even the most extensive Star Wars museum around could use a few more exhibits. ■ Tom Root

BABYLON 5 TOYS HEADLINE EXCLUSIVE TOY PRODUCTS LAUNCH

Captain John Sheridan, Ambassador Delenn and G'Kar are the debut B5 figures from Exclusive Toy Products.

When it comes to exclusive toys, the aptly named Exclusive Toy Products is already on top of the game.

"Our retailers really put us into this category," explained Reginald Brack, ETP's vice president of Licensing and New Business Development. "Target was the first one to ask us to do a property (the Three Stooges). After that, they commissioned seven other properties. We went to Toys R Us and FAO Schwarz, and we're selling to Kay-Bee Toys as well. This is our niche. This is all we do."

Exclusive Toys has already hit the ground running by specializing in providing an eclectic mix of '60s and '70s television genres as well as classic movie-inspired dolls and action figures. The company's roster already includes 9-inch figures devoted to the Beverly Hillbillies, Burns & Allen, the Dukes of Hazzard, the Munsters, the Honeymooners, Gunsmoke, Rawhide and the Wild Wild West, all products licensed exclusively to Toys R Us. But perhaps the biggest news for sci-fi fans is ETP's acquisition of the Babylon 5 toy license, which will be offered to both Toys R Us and Diamond Comic Distributors Inc.

"The driving force behind Babylon 5 is that it is really a fresh, huge, sci-fi show and it's such a highly anticipated property as far as merchandising goes," Brack said. "The first assortment will include Captain John Sheridan, Ambassador Delenn and Ambassador G'Kar for Toys R Us. Lennier, Vir and Marcus Cole are being distributed through Diamond Comics. In addition we are partnering with Warner Bros.'s new toy company, WB Toys, on a line of 6-inch action figures with molded clothing. They should be in stores by December."

Exclusive's Babylon 5 series will be limited to roughly 36,000 pieces each, with an expected retail price of $19.99 to $29.99 for the 9-inch figures.

Other ETP licenses include Bewitched for FAO Schwarz, as well as Gilligan's Island, Happy Days, the Blues Brothers, Laurel & Hardy and It's a Wonderful Life, all distributed through Target retailers.

"We also have big plans for James Bond," Brack added. "We're doing three characters from the new movie, 'Tomorrow Never Dies,' which will be released this December, and figures for all the 17 classic Bond movies. We're making them with fabric clothing as well. Dr. No will be the first classic assortment released pre-Christmas at Toys R Us, who will be our exclusive distributor of James Bond for the mass [market]. We're also planning a line of Bond Girls."

Brack hinted that "Casablanca" will be immortalized in action figures in the future with Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman adaptations. As well, Exclusive will provide fans of violet-eyed film diva Elizabeth Taylor with an action figure likeness.

"Our company's goal is to continue to provide our customers with high-quality, limited-edition product at an affordable price," Brack said. "We're looking to maximize our properties to really [give] collectors what has never been brought to them before." ■ Marc Rosenzweig

TOY OF THE MONTH

OCTOBER'S coolest action figure... LADY DEMON!

Who: Lady Demon—the totally evil version of Lady Death. Even though she is darkness incarnate, Lady Death still has some small shred of goodness inside. In the Chaos! Comics miniseries Lady Death: Between Heaven and Hell, Lucifer compelled Lady Death to give in to her dark side, transforming her into the thoroughly evil Lady Demon.

What: Lady Demon's one-quarter of the first Chaos! action figure assortment from Moore Action Collectibles. She joins Lady Death, Evil Ernie and Purgatori in a set of 6-inch, highly detailed figures designed by sculptor extraordinaire Clayburn Moore.

Where: Available at comic book/ hobby stores, or by joining the M.A.C. Collector's Society by writing to P.O. Box 203818, Austin, TX 78720 or calling 1-888-485-8134. It's toll free!

When: October...in time for Halloween and the witching hour!

Why: Are you blind? Just look at 'er! Don't think we're weird or nothin', but this action figure is, well...really freakin' hot! Sure, we could cover our asses by gettin' all highbrow and admiring the dynamic way in which Clayburn Moore posed Lady Death and how he paid close attention to subtle details right down to her li'l belly button. Rrrrowww! But who're we kidding? She's got a skimpy costume and a chest that'd give Dolly Parton a hernia. This is simply one of the nicest-looking hunks of plastic we've ever seen. Just don't let our moms know we're buying one...heck, maybe two! ■ The ToyFare Staff

STAR WARS UPDATE

As Kenner gears up for its 1998 product releases—sure to be another banner year for cash cow Star Wars: Power of the Force—ToyFare decided to cobble together a status list of where the Cincinnati-based company stands in terms of its Force-based lineup. Since Kenner relaunched the Star Wars toy franchise in 1995, the company has nearly rivaled its original offerings from 1977-1985 in terms of character adaptations (both old and new) and technical updates on vehicles and playsets (thanks in no small part to advances in voice chips and other electronics). And of its original 92 Trilogy action figures, Kenner has re-adapted all but the following characters (not counting such notable current first-time offerings like Grand Moff Tarkin and Princess Leia as Jabba's Prisoner):

- Amanaman
- Anakin Skywalker
- Barada
- Bespin Security Guard
- B-Wing Pilot
- Cloud Car Pilot
- Death Star Droid
- Ewoks (all seven of 'em!)
- General Madine
- Imperial Commander
- Imperial Dignitary
- Klaatu Skiff Guard
- Lobot
- Max Rebo Band (all of 'em!)
- Nikto
- Power Droid

- Princess Leia in Bespin Gear
- Princess Leia in Hoth Gear
- Prune Face
- Ree-Yees
- Snaggletooth
- Squid Head
- Star Destroyer Commander
- Ugnaught
- 8-D8

And for those keeping count, the following roster of fan-favorite "wish list" characters have never been included in any Kenner assortment:

- Aunt Beru and Uncle Owen Lars
- Bacta Tank Luke (Luke inna diaper!)
- Bantha
- Biggs Darklighter
- Cantina Barkeep Wuher
- Darth Vader w/ Removable Helmet
- Ceremonial Han & Ceremonial Leia
- "Ghost" Yoda
- Mon Mothma
- More Cantina Aliens!
- Rebel Pilots (Dack!)
- Oola and "Return of the Jedi: The Special Edition" Dancers

While the master toy license for the forthcoming Star Wars "Prequel" films has not yet been awarded (at least at press time!), Kenner will continue to churn out Trilogy-based figures, vehicles and playsets through 1998. ■ The ToyFare Staff

B'OMARR MONK TAKING ORDERS!

For diehard Star Wars collectors itchin' to get their hands on the new Internet exclusive B'omarr Monk action figure, the wait is over! First offered as part of Kenner's "Hunt for the Ultimate Bounty" trivia contest on the Official Hasbro Star Wars Website (<http://starwars.hasbro.com/>), orders are now being taken from the general public to acquire this latest Star Wars exclusive. For regular U.S. orders, fans must send in $5.99 plus $1.99 shipping and handling ($7.98 total per figure, California orders add applicable sales tax) to:

Special Internet B'omarr Monk Figure
P.O. Box 5502
Kalamazoo, MI 49003-5502

Note: Checks made payable to: Hasbro Promotions & Direct Inc. Readers of ToyFare should code their orders "SW2" to denote that you obtained your mailing information here.

Canadian orders must send $8.99 plus $2.75 shipping and handling ($11.74 total per figure, plus applicable Canadian sales tax) to:
Special Internet B'omarr Monk Figure, Hasbro Direct Inc.
Hasbro Canada Inc.
C.P. 267, Succ. A
Longueuil, Quebec, Canada J4H 3X6

Kenner has placed no limit on the amount of orders per figure, so send for as many Monks as you like—the company will keep on making the figure until all orders are filled. This offer is available until January 31, 1998. Allow six to eight weeks for delivery. For more information, just check out the Official Star Wars website, and be sure to peruse all the latest Kenner updates! ■ The ToyFare Staff

RENAISSANCE

Godzilla will be getting the same full-body puppet treatment Renaissance used with this year's Last World films when Godzilla says his shovels next spring, neatly coinciding with the "Godzilla" feature film. Renaissance has also announced plans for its own line of dinosaur action figures, tentatively titled the Carnage Collection. "I told McFarlane and some dinosaur action figures, this is what they'd look like," Renaissance President Doug Sapp reported.

Step aside, Xena. Move over, Ripley.

This gal's badder'n the both of ya!

Fans of both video games and action figures will have something to look forward to this Christmas when Toy Biz and Eidos Interactive team up to release the first Tomb Raider action figure! Modeled after Lara Croft, the statuesque heroine of the groundbreaking video game, the figure should have a lot of appeal...and not just for obvious reasons.

Prior to the release of the first Tomb Raider game on PC and PlayStation last year, Eidos Interactive was not a major player in the video game industry. Tomb Raider changed that status radically, its phenomenal success putting both the software and its publisher on the map. Tomb Raider was a bit unusual; previous action hits like DOOM and Duke Nukem had always chauvinistically forced the player into a male role, but this new game featured Lara Croft, a tough-as-nails, take-no-crap, Indiana Jones-like adventurer. Furthermore, a strong backstory helped to flesh out Lara's character and made her at least as popular as the game in which she starred.

Case in point: Lara has broken out of her interactive world on at least two previous occasions, appearing on the cover of British pop fashion magazine The Face and guest-starring with U2 on their Pop Mart tour. (During the concert, Lara showed up on the big screen and interacted with lead singer Bono.) Now she's about to make her third break from gaming with the release of her debut Tomb Raider action figure.

It was clearly meant to happen. Looking for a way to expand their toy offerings, Toy Biz recently had started looking for new licenses. "We realized that what's very hot is home entertainment and video games, much more now than they ever were before,"

Product Manager Jesse Falcon comments. Enter Keith Boesky, president of Eidos, who contacted Falcon about making an action figure of Lara Croft. From there, everything fell smoothly into place.

Once the deal was inked, the design process began. "We've worked very closely with Eidos to keep all the aesthetic details as accurate as possible for the Lara figure," says Falcon.

Pinning down a target age group for the figures is more complicated than it appears. "The people who play the game will buy them, so the older collectors will like Lara," Falcon says. "But Tomb Raider has such a wide range of followers, from 5-year-olds to 45-year-olds, that we feel the character herself has a good awareness in the market."

Falcon expects Lara will retail for around $6.99, and you can expect to get a lot for your seven bucks. Four weapons from the game will be in the package: a pistol, an Uzi, a streetsweeper and an M-16. And although Lara is currently the only figure in the line, she won't be traveling alone. "She'll have two little sidekicks," Falcon says. "One is a bat, because she encounters a lot of bats in the game. The other is an Atlantean skinless demon."

Additional figures in the line are planned, but nothing specific has been announced yet. "It's just Lara Croft for right now," Falcon says. "We're planning on doing a full-blown action figure line with some deluxe figures, and we'll get into the details at Toy Fair [next February]."

Like the other video game figures Toy Biz has planned (Resident Evil figures will be available in March of next year, and Street Fighter vs. X-Men should be out in time for Christmas), the Tomb Raider line could blossom into several series of figures...if it's as successful as the mega-popular video game. But Lara's got an ace up her sleeveless tank top. "Lara Croft will be hitting the shelves in mid-November around the same time as Tomb Raider 2, which is one of the most highly anticipated game sequels ever," Falcon notes. Success could lead to not only more Tomb Raider figures, but more video game figures overall. But since Lara dons several outfits for the Tomb Raider sequel, we can be sure to expect several variants of Lara Croft in all her...uh...buoyant glory.

Playmates tackles fans' top Star Trek toy topics By Tom Root

If there's an Action Figure Prime Directive, Playmates ain't payin' no mind. The company's Star Trek action figure line has never followed the rules. Favoring aesthetics over playability and encompassing an enormous array of characters from four TV series and eight "Star Trek" feature films, Playmates' Trek line has carved out a niche unlike any other in the market today.

Toyfare managed to snare the ever-busy Chris Overly, Playmates Star Trek product and brand manager, to ask him some of the most pressing questions Trekkies have about their beloved toys. And there are some real puzzlers: Just where the heck are the vehicles? Why have the figures' heads been so darn big? And what's up with those monochromatic accessories?

With Playmates' recent Trek waves featuring such new approaches as radically changing the sculpt of its bread-and-butter 4 1/2-inch action figure line and reducing articulation, the time seemed right to do some fact-finding and...well...boldly go where no collector has gone before. Engage.

TOYFARE: Are Star Trek figures aimed more at collectors or children?

OVERLY: About 70 percent of our total gross income in the Star Trek line is collector-based. [The other] 30 percent is children under 12. [Star Trek] itself is a great license, but it still doesn't generate enough kid appeal for kids to be running to buy it. We are generating some of that kid appeal by doing the new Strike Force line [of micro-sized ships and figures]. We want the new generation of Star Trek fans, so it's important for us to be in both markets—there's definitely a collector side and there's definitely a [children's] toy side.

Why is articulation cut down in favor of better sculpting? Is there a way you can do both?

Articulation is definitely secondary to the look and feel of the character. The characters have to have this "pop-off-of-the-shelf" presence at retail. We want the consumer to say, "Wow, that's an incredible-looking 4 1/2-inch figure!" or, "Wow, that 9-inch figure has an amazing cloth deco on it!"

But extra articulation costs us extra money, and we would like to put that extra money into getting better decos on our figures. We know that most of the collectors buying these items are keeping them in the package anyway. They'll keep them on the cards; they're never going to open them. We know through surveys we've taken that about 5 percent of the collectors pull the figures out of the package and use them in dioramas. We also know we can get better [paint] decoration if we reduce some of the articulation. It's the same program Toy Biz did with its X-Men: Robot Fighters and its newer Spider-Man Web Splasers. The articulation is minimal, but the decoration is great, and that's what we want with our toys.

Why does the Star Trek action figure line lack compatible playsets and vehicles?

Well, we only made 110,000 of the [Next Generation] Transporter sets and there's still 75,000 of them sitting in our warehouse. That kind of tells you that there is a market for playsets and vehicles, but it's a very small, select market. There was a really unique play feature in the Transporter. It was something that we even patented. But even though we've gone to those extra efforts, playsets never turned out to be a very profitable business for this line.

We did the Galileo Shuttlecraft with an exclusive Kirk figure, and again, that never took. It's still sitting in retail and it was released over a year and a half ago.

Also, retailers are very, very unresponsive to playsets. Toys R Us has said in the past, "Get off the playsets and give us 'peggable' items [like action figures]."

Is there any chance the Enterprise Bridge playset, due out last year, will ever see release?

As of right now, no. Even if it sells to those original 30,000 people or 35,000 people who bought the Transporter, it would cost us probably over a million dollars to produce. We were thinking, "When this gets tooled up, it's going to be a hot item," but when putting together the cost and the way we wanted to do it, it wasn't really beneficial. For the amount of money that we would spend on it, it wasn't really possible.

Has Star Trek parent Paramount ever put the kibosh on toys you've proposed?

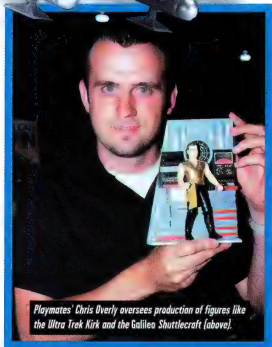

Not really. We have a very good relationship with Paramount. If we have a concept or an idea, they're willing to jump in there and say, "Yeah, you can't do that. We appreciate these kinds of new concepts," because that also feeds into their creativity.

Does Paramount ever request specific products from Playmates?

With Star Trek, it's such a huge license that to kick out anything that they would want us to do is very, very easy. And we can usually get good numbers from it.

With some things, such as the Paramount Home Video exclusive figure, we lost a lot of money. It hasn't been released yet, but we tooled up a figure and we gave it to them at cost. We're giving it to them exclusively for their video and we're not getting anything out of it. It's costing us our time, money and resources to do that, but we know that the consumer would like something like that. So we created it.

Playmates' Chris Overly oversees production of figures like the Ultra Trek Kirk and the Galileo Shuttlecraft (above).

"...AND AS KIRK RUNS OFF TO KAHLESS KNOWS WHERE OUR TWO RACERS—STILL NECK AND NECK—SHOW NO SIGN OF FATIGUE!"

"WAIT...THE GORN'S STOPPED, AS IF HE'S SEEING SOMETHING..."

"...NOW SOME SORT OF SHADOW HAS FALLEN OVER THE TRACK. I CAN'T MAKE OUT WHAT IT IS..."

Do the sales of the toy lines tend to mirror the ratings of the individual shows? For example, do 'Star Trek: Deep Space Nine' figures do better than 'Star Trek: Voyager' figures?

No, not necessarily. It's really character to character—our Sisko figures have always done well. So does Janeway, and Picard has always been one of those natural staples. If you want to sell a figure, just make it Picard or Kirk. That's really one of the golden rules.

At retail, the most important thing for us is to make sure that the consumer gets a chance for all the characters they love. And we don't want to deny them any characters.

Other than the high-profile characters, how do you decide which figures get made?

We take a lot of surveys. A lot of information comes in via our website, and we enclose a regular mailing card with some of our packaging. We process that information and we read it very, very closely. But we also look at things like the sales on the issue of TV Guide that had Captain Janeway [from 'Star Trek: Voyager'] on the cover vs. the TV Guide that had Jean-Luc Picard on the cover.

There's very, very little personal selection from my end. I do pick characters that are cool-looking within this larger selection of items that have been requested. Many times, people will want Kirk, but they might want Kirk in Environmental Suit from the "Tholian Web" episode. And that's why we produced that figure, because he's an important character to everybody. At the same time, that show is also important to them and seeing him in that new format is elemental.

The Star Trek brand is very difficult to read and if we do not take information from surveys or other sources, and if we do not produce those figures, we'd be fools.

Why have the figures' heads and hands been so oversized?

I don't necessarily know why the hands were, but I know the heads were oversized because Playmates was out to prove that we do the best sculpts in the business.

Recently, we've taken the direction where we're going to do action figures more in scale with the bodies. We know now that people look at them and say, "Yes, that is the character." Now we're going in a whole new direction where the heads are going to be in scale with the actual bodies on the 4 1/2-inch figures.

Why have the accessories been so lackluster in the past? They've all been a single color, and it's often difficult for the figures to hold them.

The accessories have always been secondary to our consumers. When we've done stuff that's a little bit more kid-style that fit in the figures' hands real well but didn't really match the Star Trek universe, it cost us more money and the consumer liked it less.

Our collectors do mind [when the figures can't hold their accessories]. But we turn around figures faster than any other company in the business. We can get a sculpt and turn around a figure in less than five months. That includes tooling the figure, manufacturing it, putting it on a blister and getting it out in the stores. Most companies are in a year-and-a-half cycle.

One of the disadvantages we have is when we make decisions after coming up with figures this quickly, we're not able to control some items as well. And accessories are one of the items that slip through the cracks. But, to the benefit of the consumer, we're also taking the newest information. If we're finding out that a new character on "Voyager" is really, really popular we can make that character and have it out in the marketplace in five months. Other toy companies can't do that.

Do the actors approve their likenesses?

Patrick Stewart has always had "head approval." The same with Brent Spiner as of "Star Trek: First Contact." LeVar Burton has actor approval; the same with William Shatner. The estate of Jeffrey Hunter, the guy who played Christopher Pike, also has actor approval—and it's not even being approved by the actor! But the estate gets a sculpt and must approve it.

Do actors in the Star Trek series and movies have the opportunity to refuse to be an action figure?

No, that's really up to Rick Berman, the producer of the show. If there's a character he doesn't want reproduced as an action figure, then we have to say, "Okay."

One of the reasons the Borg Queen was late was [Berman] didn't want any likeness of the action figure being out [before "First Contact" was released]; we got a reference almost at the same time the movie came out.

I'm sure there's a couple of items he doesn't think are appropriate for action figures. One item that I had produced an illustration for was Captain Christopher Pike after he was mangled. I think it was an interesting collector's item to have, because he's never been done. After submitting it, they said that they would rather us produce another character.

Why did you elect to give the figures a V-crotch? They can't sit correctly.

We are producing a couple of figures right now in a T-crotch formation. But, again, when you do a T-crotch, you lose some detail which you were able to achieve with the V-crotch. But the V-crotch figures do kind of sit like Buddha if you turn their legs outward.

Previous Trek figures like Elim Garak have sported monochromatic accessories.

NONE OF THESE FIT PROPERLY. A SUPPOSITORY HAS TO BE COMFORTABLE!

(Right) Star Trek: First Contact's Lily and the Classic Star Trek Spock.

What's been the most difficult figure to produce?

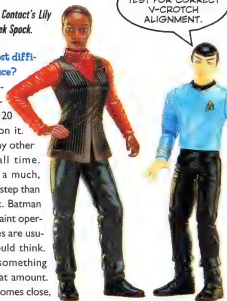

The Borg Queen 6-inch Ultra Trek figure. We have over 120 decorated pieces on it. That's more than any other action figure of all time. We've taken it to a much, much, much farther step than you can with plastic. Batman is usually about 20 paint operations. X-Men figures are usually about 30. I would think. We're producing something that's four times that amount. The only thing that comes close, when we counted it out, was about 60 paint operations on a Spawn figure—[McFarlane Toys] is the only one that we feel has really done things right when it comes to producing figures and the likeness directly for the collector/consumer.

Why have the sizes of the Star Trek figures changed so much over the years?

It's pretty much just a marketing situation. We decided that the 4 1/2-inch size is the best format, but we need to expand our horizons. I mean, when we do the 6-inch figures, such as the 6-inch Zefram Cochrane from "First Contact"—you cannot find a likeness that looks better than that. It's going to cost us a little bit more money and we have to consider that, but I think they look better.

The 7-inch Space Talk Series was pretty much a marketing decision, to try to get kids more into the property. It was a little bit bigger scale, easier to handle, and it was big enough to house a sound chip. We would never produce that 7-inch scale plastic figure without some kind of electronic mechanism.

ALLOW ME TO TEST FOR CORRECT V-CROTCH ALIGNMENT.

We've never competed against one line or the other. There hasn't been a consumer who's said, "You know, I'd like to buy the 4 1/2-inch ones, but there are so many cool 9-inch ones out there." We've never had that kind of competition internally on a toy line.

Finally, the big question: Who's winning the action figure battle, Picard or Kirk?

Picard is still the number one selling item, hands down. Number one selling and the number one requested. That's probably because we started the line with the Next Generation. But Kirk is a very, very close second. I'd say if Picard was requested 100 percent of the time, then Kirk would be requested 99.97 percent of the time. It's a very close margin—I would even say that Picard and Kirk are neck-and-neck.

X-MEN: Children

Think of them as the coolest toys you'll never see.

Designed as a tie-in to Capcom's ultra popular X-Men: Children of the Atom and Marvel Super-Heroes video games, Toy Biz was set to release a full line of 3 3/4-inch action figures based on the most popular characters in the games—Wolverine (two versions no less, one masked and one au naturel!), Hulk, Storm, Juggernaut, Spider-Man, Super Sentinel, Colossus, Magneto and the evil demon Blackheart. Haven't seen them yet? No? You're not gonna, either.

"We displayed them in 1995 at Toy Fair [the industry's annual trade show], but there just wasn't a huge response from our major clients like Toys R Us or Kay Bee," said Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon. "We had a lot of other specialty product out at the same time, like Marvel Mega Armor and the Weapon X Playset. From the retail point of view, each one takes up a certain amount of shelf space, and that space is very, very valuable. You want to put toys out there that you are sure will sell."

For both assortments, the major selling factor came with packaging that emulated real stand-up arcade video games, while each figure was to include action bases for the figure to punch, kick, head-butt, etc., depending on their respective arcade version's "abilities." But even these obvious bells and whistles weren't enough to get X-Men: Children of the Atom or Marvel Super-Heroes action figures into toy stores.

Falcon explained that despite the harshness of the decision by the chain store representatives, dropping an action figure line after prototypes have been sculpted occurs more often than you'd think. "This kind of thing happens year in, year out," Falcon said. "If you look at companies' initial offerings at Toy Fair any given year, you'd see that about 30% of what's offered never makes it to stores. If the store reps don't think a toy will be a strong seller, they're probably right. We trust their judgment."

From a creative point-of-view, Falcon admitted that it can be personally disappointing to see a line fail to make it. "It is frustrating, especially when you've put a lot of work into figures like these, but it's still a business—and you learn to take the good with the bad," Falcon said. "You just keep trying."

"At the end of the day, though, I'm not disappointed. Yeah, it was a really cool line and it had really great sculpting, but we really got the better end of the deal because, thanks to this initial deal with Capcom, we were able to do the upcoming Street Fighter vs. X-Men figures, and we think fans will be really happy with them."

CREEPY TOYS

Army of Darkness

From blood-thirsty aliens to rotting zombies, monster toys conquer the world!

By Tom Palmer Jr.

Wanna get really scared?

Forget about the "Scream" sequel. Turn off your Marilyn Manson CD. Dog-ear that Stephen King novel. The real frights and scares can be found in the last place you'd expect: the toy store.

More than ever before, action figure enthusiasts are snatching up all things dark and scary...and toy companies are delivering with boatloads of the creepiest action figures. From McFarlane Toys' mega-popular Todd McFarlane's Monsters playsets and gruesome Spawn characters to Toy Biz's Venom assortments and Moore Action Collectibles' Chaos! action figures, sales of monster toys have gone through the roof in the past few years. Without a doubt, the most memorable and popular recent action figures with both kids and collectors include an inordinate amount of frightening creatures.

They might be gross, ugly and downright repulsive, but monster action figures are definitely in, second only to Star Wars in popularity. Kids just don't have the same passion for superheroes anymore, and today's monster toys offer cool creatures anyone can recognize. Adult collectors are part of the monster game too, attracted by all of the macabre details made possible by recent advances in sculpting and paint applications.

Some think that monster toys have gone too far. Do we really need creatures with removable brains? Or what about pulsing bodily fluids? Regardless of the answer, it looks as if there's no stopping the monster toys in their quest to take over toy stores across the country.

RIISING FROM THE GRAVE

Today's interest in monster action figures is really nothing new. Kids have always gobbled up scary toys. As the horror movie genre has proved, people actually like to be scared, and toy manufacturers picked up on this a long time ago. "Toys are so visual," explains Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon. "Instead of just having a sinister character with a big cape like a typical bad guy, toy companies want something with more of a visual impact—and monsters fit that bill perfectly."

The current monster toys have their roots back in the mid-1960s with the infamous Aurora model kits, plastic dioramas of classic Universal Monsters like Frankenstein and Dracula. While Aurora's models technically weren't toys, these legendary offerings were the inspiration for many of today's scariest action figures. The classic Universal Monsters were also the subject of numerous action figure lines over the years, from AHI's 9-inch Mego-style dolls to Remco's 3 3/4-inch glow-in-the-dark action figures.

TOP 10 MONSTER TOYS #10 ARACULA

By the late '70s and early '80s, it looked like monster toys were on the upswing. Mattel's mammoth Godzilla toy dominated their Shogun Warriors line, while Mego's Micronauts included a set of alien invaders with various glow-in-the-dark brains and body parts. The main attraction of Kenner's Star Wars action figure line was the host of otherworldly beasts and creatures—each movie in the trilogy gave fans more and more bizarre alien creatures, from Cantina denizens like Greedo and Walus Man to the three-eyed Ree Yees and snake-like Amanaman.

When Ridley Scott's "Alien" terrified movie audiences in 1979, toy manufacturer Kenner completely bypassed the human members of the cast and focused on H.R. Giger's unforgettable extraterrestrial. Unfortunately, the R-rated film and unabashed ferocity of the film's creature scared off many potential buyers and the original Alien toy was quickly pulled from shelves.

Toy manufacturers ran into a similar dilemma in the 1980s. While horror movie franchises like "Halloween," "Friday the 13th" and "A Nightmare on Elm Street" flourished at movie theaters, there was an understandable lack of any action figure tie-ins. No doubt toy manufacturers found it almost unthinkable to sell plastic replicas of cinema serial murderers like the hockey mask-wearing Jason or the razor-clawed Freddy Krueger to children's toy stores across America. Monster fans in the Reagan years had to satisfy themselves with goofy critters like Moss Man or Klawful in Mattel's Masters of the Universe line.

By the time the '90s rolled around, toy manufacturers were looking for some way to capture the imagination of kids and tap into the burgeoning collectors' market. Somehow, monsters were the answer. "A lot of people were just looking for these things to be made," explains McFarlane Toys co-president Ed Frank. "Toy collecting has become more popular and manufacturers realized that monsters don't necessarily have to be driven by a movie or

Toy Biz kept its Spider-Man franchise fresh by delving into monster territory.

TV show. These are things that are imbedded in everybody's memory."

CLAWING TO THE TOP

Today, monster figures are the undisputed kings of the toy aisles...after Star Wars, of course. And that's no small feat.

McFarlane Toys was one of the first companies to capitalize on the interest in monsters, with realistic sculpting and terrifying creatures. While early Spawn action figure lines would include just one scary figure (a Violator or a Tremor) per assortment, recent releases are comprised entirely of ghoulish creations like the company's Grave Digger and the Gate Keeper. McFarlane Toys has also struck paydirt with the outlandish creatures in its Total Chaos line and the mega-popular McFarlane's Monsters playsets, which reinvigorated interest in characters like Dracula, Frankenstein, the Werewolf and the Hunchback of Notre Dame.

Toy Biz also picked up on the monster trend early on. When it came time to create new variations for the iconic Spider-Man—one of the company's cash cows—the Biz took the monster route and came up with creations like the B-movie-esque Man-Spider and the clawed Vampire Spider-Man. They even released an entire assortment of monstrous Spider-Man amalgams like Man-Lizard and Spider-Goblin. Marvel's Venom characters (Venom, Carnage and company) have also provided Toy Biz with fuel for more monster figures—enough to even create two popular assortments of Venom figures.

But why the recent interest in monsters? "Maybe people have a deep underlying fear of an impending apocalypse in the year 2000," offers Chet Jacques, director of the McFarlane Toys Collector's Club. "Or maybe it has something to do with Halloween becoming the biggest holiday in most neighborhoods. People [adorn] their houses with more decorations on Halloween than they do for Christmas. It's non-denominational, so most people won't get offended."

For Toy Biz, a company built on Marvel Comics characters, monsters offer a way to keep toys interesting for fans bored with the usual superhero fare. "I think the men in tights thing is getting a little passé," Falcon explains. "As great as superheroes are, things that are more monster-like sometimes just look cooler." In fact, Toy Biz plans to branch out from superheroes very soon with their new Resident Evil line, based on the popular monster-filled computer game.

Movie monsters haven't been left out, either. Hasbro New Ventures, an arm of the Cincinnati-based Hasbro Toy Group, is releasing a set of classic Universal monsters bearing the likenesses of Lon Chaney Jr. and Boris Karloff. Palisades Toys and Full Moon Toys are collaborating to release a line based on the popular "Puppet Master" movies, a franchise full of demonic toys tailor-made for action figures.

Even Mattel, long known for its Disney-based offerings, has entered the monster figure arena with their Street Sharks and Extreme Dinosaurs lines. While they don't have the total gross-out qualities of some figures, these monsters offer something that some companies might take for granted—playability. "Kids like the fact that our creatures have human personalities," says Geoff Walker, product manager at Mattel. "It gives them something to identify with. If it was just a standard monster figure it's harder for them to act stuff out and play with them."

The success of Mattel's kid-oriented monsters reveals one key element of monster toys' success—it's primarily a boy's thing. "That doesn't surprise me," Jacques says. "Boys like to scare each other and do gross things. If there's a dead rat in the road, girls will walk around it. Boys will poke it with a stick. Boys just want to poke things and investigate them to see how cool they are."

RECIPE FOR TERROR

Ask any toy company. You can't just whip up a horrifying creature like McFarlane Toys' Malebolgia out of nowhere. Toy makers have their own bag of tricks to make a figure truly frightening. If they're used in the right way, gimmicks like real fur, light-up eyes, sound chips, glow-in-the-dark paints and pulsating liquids can make a toy really frightening.

Sometimes it's as simple as just doing your homework. "We do a lot of research to make these things look scary," reveals Falcon. "For Resident Evil we got some medical reference books on skin diseases for our sculptors to use. When the prototypes came in, we could definitely see the influence they had. The zombies in the line just look really gruesome."

While outright gore can sometimes be quite effective, sometimes holding back on the horrific can be even more terrifying. "A vampire doesn't have to have an eviscerated victim with intestines dripping over the side of the coffin," Jacques says. "But if you make sure he's got long pointy fangs and a menacing look to him, then people will respond to that."

Giving a monster an air of credibility also goes a long way. When it comes down to making it as a truly scary action figure, the ones that succeed are the action figures that still have realistic touches. Take the lifelike rubbery skin of Kenner's Lost World: Jurassic Park dinosaurs or the sculpted bone detail of McFarlane Toys' Scourge, for example.

Even when dealing with a fantastic creation that could (hopefully) never exist in real life, realism is the key. "Something has to have enough animal-like details to look like it could really be something that is alive and not a cartoon," Ed Frank explains. "The details have to resemble real muscle, real skin and real bone, just in different configurations than you're used to seeing. It still has to have some qualities where you can point to a real-life animal and recognize it, just that it's been morphed and mutated out of control."

DESTROY ALL MONSTERS!

Although monster toys are riding a huge wave of popularity, they've also come under fire by various parent groups who feel that toy companies are taking the gross-out factor a little too far. Some are simply concerned about the abundance of demons and other supernatural creatures in toy stores that are frequented by young children.

Understandably, toy manufacturers are concerned. "We pay real close attention to these issues," Falcon says. "If parents have problems with toys, that's something that needs to be dealt with. Kids don't have bank accounts or cars so they can't go out and buy the toys—parents do the majority of the buying, so what they think is really important to us."

Ed Frank doesn't really understand what all the fuss is about. "With monster toys, the goriness doesn't bother me," he says. "They are definitely a fantasy thing, a product of somebody's imagination." He does feel, however, that a distinction can be made with human-looking characters. Anything gross done to a human figure crosses a line of good taste, while with a monster there's a suspension of disbelief. "I don't think you could do something objectionable with [McFarlane Toys] Violator. He's a monster that you don't relate to as a human being. You see him as this horrible thing that you'd probably want dead anyway."

With their recent Series 8 action figures in the Spawn line, McFarlane Toys was one of the first companies to raise the suggested age on their packaging from "5 and up" to "13 and up." "Some of this stuff is definitely not for 5-year-olds," Frank acknowledges. "Spawn is a property for older age groups and we're not making any bones about that. We don't want kids to buy the toys and say they want to run out and see the movie. Then we'd get criticism that we're telling 5-year-olds [it's okay] to see a PG-13 movie."

Direct market companies like Palisades Toys or Moore Action Collectibles might be able to circumvent this issue because they don't sell through national toy stores. However, M.A.C. has taken a precautionary step and labeled their toys "Recommended for mature collectors ages 18 and over."

Things are different for a small toy company, but they still run the risk of drawing fire from concerned parents. "No matter what you put out, you're going to get criticism from somebody," says Mike Horn, president of Palisades Toys. "My personal view is if you don't want your kids to play with certain toys, don't buy them. I don't think it's anybody's position to tell me what I should or shouldn't make. If people want to buy something they'll buy it."

Regardless of a few minor objections from some people, it looks like monster toys are in it for the long haul. "Things go in and out but monsters have always tended to be a staple of the industry," Falcon says. "They're probably hitting their twelfth life at this point."

With Toy Biz's Resident Evil, M.A.C.'s upcoming figures devoted to Top Cow's Witchblade and the Darkness, more Todd McFarlane's Monsters playsets devoted to the remaining classic movie monsters and the possibility of a line of Marvel monsters in the next year, it looks like monster toys won't be going away anytime soon.

"The sales have proven that people want this stuff," Chet Jacques says. "We'll keep pushing the envelope until no kid will be able to sleep at night because his room is full of monsters and demons."

Anatomy of a Monster

Just what makes a scary toy?

That's the question we posed to Ed Frank, co-president of the McFarlane Toys design group, based in scenic northern New Jersey. Ed makes sure every single McFarlane toy can out-creep anything else in toy stores, so we thought he'd be the perfect authority to reveal all the monstrous details of the Frankenstein Playset from the Todd McFarlane's Monsters series.

The Frankenstein set, as well as the whole McFarlane's Monsters series, was heavily inspired by the legendary Aurora model kits from the '60s. "They were the coolest things you could get when I was growing up," Frank remembers. "They were just static model scenes, so I always wished I could actually play with them. That's the concept that inspired all of our monster sets."

Once you've got an inspiration, where do you go from there? Read on...

RATS!

"As we sat down and drew up the plans for the playset, we wanted to create an environment with mood and feeling. Having a rat on the floor just fit in perfectly with the feeling of a dark dungeon."

BRAINS!

"We asked ourselves, 'How would you play with a Frankenstein monster?' We came up with interchangeable body parts, and the coolest detachable body part is a head. What's the grossest thing about a head? A brain, of course."

BLOODY APRONS!

"Igor's bloody apron was something we came up with in the decoration process. If he's going to be cutting up body parts, he's bound to get some blood on his smock. Is it too much to put blood on his smock? Not if you're making a monster toy."

TOOLS OF THE TRADE

"When it came time to give Igor some tools to work with, we had to figure out what would make him as brutal as possible. A hacksaw is just more brutal than a scalpel.

These big clippers are better than a needle and thread. The choices we made were just visually more powerful."

A TEXTBOOK EXAMPLE

While it doesn't really qualify as a scary detail, there is a kind of "hidden message" in the laboratory bookshelf. "On the spine of one of the books, we inscribed the name 'Apetail.' That's the maiden name of the wife of [co-president] Tony Billotta." ■ TP

ToyFare reveals the tips and tricks for breaking into your dream job

By Tom Root

It's every toy collector's fondest wish.

Instead of trudging to work each morning for a hard-earned paycheck, hoping to have enough money left over to expand your much-beloved toy collection—what if toys were your job?

What if each workday involved discussing, planning, producing and even creating action figures? Imagine wielding the power to decide which Star Wars characters to include in the next toy line. Imagine seeing your Wolverine action figure design in stores around the world. Imagine working in a McFarlane Toys production house, sculpting monsters and ghastly ghouls all day—and getting paid for it!

Any toy fan would agree: Snaring a job at any of the big industry players, like Kenner, Toy Biz and Playmates, or any of the ever-growing number of upstart companies, would seem like a trip to Action Figure Nirvana.

The problem is, there's a whole lot of toy fans who feel exactly the way you do. Like in any entertainment industry, whether it's music, television, movies or comics, competition for jobs in the toy market is more than stiff, it's fierce. Think toys are the perfect career for you? Join the club.

Talent alone won't do the trick. Whether it's a job in management, research or design, even the most gifted newcomer won't make it without learning the ropes, not to mention acquiring endless dedication and determination.

Sound like an uphill battle? Sound like long odds? You got it. But never fear. ToyFare rounded up a handful of toy industry insiders to share their tips, tricks and experience.

It's a long, hard road to toy success. But would you expect anything else from a dream job?

School Pays

Jesse Falcon, Toy Biz product manager, points to the toy program at New York City's Fashion Institute of Technology as having strong graduate placement in the industry. "We get a lot of interns at Toy Biz from FIT," Falcon says, and those interns very often get jobs once their degrees are completed. "Lots of Toy Biz employees started at FIT," he says.

However, getting accepted into the right art school isn't always the key to a job in the toy industry. Digger Mesch is founder of the Brooklyn-based Art Asylum, a studio responsible for sculpting several high profile toy properties for high profile companies like Toy Biz. (Web Traps Spider-Man? That was Digger's!) A cartooning major, Digger studied to be a comic book artist under greats like Will Eisner (The Spirit) and Joe Orlando (E.C.'s Tales from the Crypt and DC Comics' House of Mystery) at the School of Visual Arts in New York City, but he soon found himself drawn toward more three-dimensional pursuits.

"I couldn't get myself to do comics 24 hours a day," Digger says. "It was just a hollow feeling." Digger kept sculpting on the side, but felt it was difficult to receive the type of formal schooling he needed. "The program at SVA was honestly terrible," he recalls. "It was very much a situation where they would lead you by the nose. There was no sculpting department, unless you wanted to sculpt giant 80-foot metal [genitalia]," he laughs. "I guess that's cool, if that's what you want to do, but I wanted to do more science fiction/superhero-oriented stuff, and it just wasn't available."

This year, Digger will teach a toy art class at Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y.,

Toy Biz's Apocalypse figure was actually designed and sculpted by the folks at Art Asylum.

Can I Be a Toy Designer?

but he says many Art Asylum hopefuls hail from the Pratt Institute and Parsons School of Design, both in New York City.

Formal schooling isn't a prerequisite. Shawn Nagle, a freelance sculptor whose credits include work for Toy Biz (Beast and Colossus from X-Men: Battle Brigade) and Palisades (Ash and the upcoming Painkiller Jane), says he simply picked up a few sculpture books and taught himself through trial and error. "I started with mostly model kits, then moved to statues and then to toys," Nagle says.

Falcon also points out that any college has business and management programs, so the farther away from the creative end you get, the less important an art degree becomes. Working in toys doesn't have to consist of whipping up brilliant sculpture and control art, but strong artistic abilities are important, Falcon says. "I think you have to have some sort of artistic experience to be in a job where you're reviewing 2-D and 3-D artwork all the time," he says.

Contacts!

Digger says his first attempt at entering the toy business was a foray to Toy Fair, the action figure industry's most important convention, held annually in New York City.

At the time, Digger was involved in several projects with Jason Adams, son of comics legend Neal Adams. Digger and Adams assembled their portfolios and set off to Toy Fair to try and scare up some work. "We just walked that building from bottom to top," Digger says. "We solicited every single company in that building that would actually let us in the door."

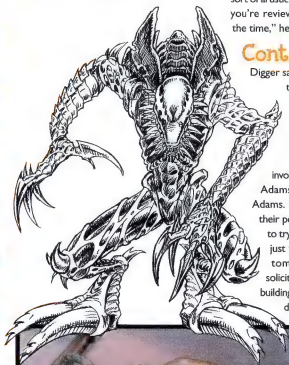

Companies were less than receptive, Digger says. "Ninety-nine percent of the reactions we got were, 'Get the f out of here,' but for the most part it was a good experience."

Their doggedness at Toy Fair eventually paid off. Out of the countless companies Digger and Adams approached, two actually showed interest: Toymax, which had found great success in the 1980s with a moldable-slime series called Creepy Crawlers; and FunWorld, creator of Halloween products.

Nagle also stresses the importance of hitting conventions and making yourself known to members of the toy community. When it comes time to send out portfolios, knowing who to send them to suddenly becomes a pressing matter. "If you haven't pressed the flesh and talked to people, it's going to be really hard for you to get in," Nagle says. "Unless you're a mega-talent."

Making his face and artwork known helped Nagle land his first toy work. He had been trying to break in at Toy Biz, but since the bulk of his work was in sculpture, the company was hesitant.

"They weren't sure if I could handle the joints and stuff involved with toys, so they held off on calling me," Nagle says. "Finally I went to San Diego one year and I talked to Jesse Falcon. I told him I understood the principle of toys and I understood how to do it. I told him they should give me a try, and they went ahead and did it."

Even after gaining some experience in the field, Digger still had to keep selling himself in order to get work. "I had to call Toy Biz for at least six to seven months beyond my initial contact to get in with them. I'd keep asking, 'Do you have any work yet? Do you have any try outs yet?'"

Persistence is key, Falcon says. "Approach the toy companies and show them your work," he insists. "Keep pursuing it and getting feedback from the companies. If you keep showing your work, you might get some bites." Even if all the leg-work and handshakes don't result in a job immediately, it's rarely a wasted effort. "If we think the work is good, we will keep people on file," Falcon says. "If we can use them on something, we generally do."

Despite the heavy competition on the artistic side of the toy industry, the situation isn't completely hopeless. "If you look at the amount of people who've asked us for work, and the amount of people we've given work to, the numbers are actually pretty high," Falcon says. "That being said, a lot of times people come in and show us stuff and their work's not to the point where we would use them." Rather than an outright rejection, Falcon says he tries to point prospective toy-makers in the right direction. "I try to help them refine their skills to the point where our company or other companies could use them," he says. "I'll refer them to a lot of other sculptors, like Digger at Art Asylum."

What They Really Really Want

Falcon struggles a bit when trying to define exactly what he's looking for when it comes to art portfolios.

"It's like trying to describe the color red to a blind man," he says. "It's either there or it isn't."

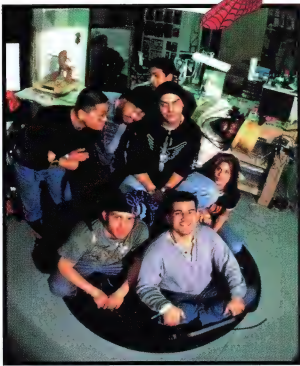

There are some general guidelines he can offer, however. Sculptures must be tight and clean, and he looks for plenty of experience with the medium on submitted résumés. For artists hoping to secure a position drafting character designs and control art, Falcon looks for "nice, clean, neat work. Proficient and efficient."

For all artists, speed is of the utmost importance, he says. "There's always a schedule. There's always a deadline."

Nagle concurs. "In any commercial art industry, where you're making money off of a product, speed is important," he says. "If you're a good artist and you're fairly fast, you will get a lot of work. If you're slow and laborious and you take forever, you're not going to get a lot of work, just because it's a matter of money. Time is money."

Digger is more specific about what kind of art he looks for from prospective sculptors: realism. "I get a lot of résumés with art classes in abstraction and abstract fabrication and assemblage," none of which relates well to action figures, he says. "I see lots of assemblage and 'found object art.' What that means to me is somebody's finding two Coke cans and gluing 'em to a canvas, urinating on the back of it and calling it art."

Digger (seated center, lookin' eerily like Marilyn Manson) and his staff at Art Asylum work in the toy industry by supplying action figure sculptures, like Web Traps Spider-Man (above), to the major companies.

"If you want to be a sculptor in a commercial sense, you really need more realistic skills," Digger explains. "Look for a class that is most definitely geared toward realism and toward anatomy. Really get your academic structure down."

The need for such specific detail is the nature of the beast, Digger says, and it's a crucial skill when it comes to action figures. "It's got to be right from every single angle," he says. "The tricky thing is, you have to sculpt with realism in mind. But you're breaking a human figure into sections of movement that it was really never designed for. Your muscle groups don't get pushed into sections on either side of a dividing line. There's no line with a pin there." And this, Digger says, is where sculpting toys becomes extremely frustrating. "You have to sculpt things wrong in a sense, but you have to make it look right. It has to look right but it has to work, it has to be a functional toy."

Familiarity with the subject matter is a must. Most of Falcon's work, for example, is overseeing Marvel Comics characters, which would be impossible without an intimate knowledge of the characters and worlds in the Marvel Universe. Falcon, in fact, interned at Marvel and worked for Heroes World, the comic company's now-defunct distributor.

Knowledge of the subject is something Digger sums up as "vision." "Vision comes from being a comic book enthusiast, or in touch with science fiction or manga or whatever it may be," he says. "Often, we'll receive iffy control art [from toy companies], where it's really not all there, and they'll tell us to 'give it the extra punch.' Now, if I say that to someone who doesn't read comics, how the hell are they going to know what I want? I could show them 10,000 comics, but it's just going to confuse them more."

Shattered Dreams

Not every job in toys is a ticket to heaven. In fact, sign the wrong contract and you could find yourself sitting in the following festering action figure hells:

- 10. The guy who paints all the eyes on Galoob's Micro Machines Jawas. Like he didn't eat a bullet on day three.
- 9. Sitting in an otherwise empty room with a pile of Bananas in Pajamas toys and the instructions: "Fill these by any means necessary."
- 8. Night watchman at a Trendmasters warehouse filled with motion-activated ID4 voice-chip aliens. "Rhaaghhhhh!!" BLAM! BLAM! BLAM!
- 7. Lining up pre-schoolers and seeing if the Rocket-Firing Boba Fett can really take a kid's eye out.
- 6. Eater of all the leftover Tarzan toys. That just sucks.
- 5. Looking for new action figure ideas by watching "Batman and Robin" and "Steel" over and over and over and over... BLAM!
- 4. Surveying bitter old people on the evil influences of McFarlane Toys, while politely pretending that all them colostomy bags don't need changin'.
- 3. Being the guy who has to sit in a room and test Toy Biz's "Somersault Beast" action feature until he gets it to work. Tell us he's not in a bell tower with a high-powered rifle muttering to himself right now.
- 2. Publicist for the hair-eating Cabbage Patch Kid. "Uhh...sorry to hear about little Wendy, but remember that chick from the first Star Trek movie? Bald is in! Hello...?"
- 1. Testing to see just how much of that Stretch Armstrong filling you can eat before you hallucinate yourself into a Warner Bros. cartoon and begin crushing house pets with mallets. ■ The ToyFare staff

The Florida-based Nagle brings up a more practical concern when it comes to the business: location. "That's probably the hardest thing in this industry," he says. "Where you live is important. Companies don't like to ship things back and forth; you could lose a week on a project just shipping things here and there. And to them, a week is a long time." Falcon agrees. "It helps to live in New York" when working for Toy Biz, he says, although it's not an insurmountable obstacle.

Jaded Or Jubilant?

Just when does the dream job in toys become just another day in the salt mines?

When asked whether Nagle has retained the fanboy enthusiasm for toys of his youth, he chuckles. "I wish I could say yes!" he says, a bit sadly. "But to be honest with you, no. Almost every toy I've ever done has been a rush job. And most rush jobs aren't enjoyable."

From an artistic standpoint, Nagle's employment in the toy field has left him with a bad taste in his mouth. "I'm not really a big fan of toys anymore," he says. "I used to love toys. Now, it's gotten to the point where I like sculptures and things more; things that really capture the essence of what a character is about. Most toys are kind of vague and, in my eyes, are not perfect representations of characters. They're just a product."

Nagle says he finds more satisfaction sculpting his statues for purely aesthetic reasons. "I'd rather try for something that's like a Michelangelo sculpture, but with a superhero character—that excites me. Not so much a thing that has these big joints in the elbows, ruining the lines of the figure."

Despite a few upcoming toy projects, Nagle says he no longer actively pursues his toy work. "To be honest, a lot of it has been disappointing for me," he explains. "I've never liked any production of my toy work. I've never liked the finished product, because they change it so much; they do little things to it at the factory and it just kind of irks you. I think that's being an artist, though. When you're an artist, you're never really satisfied. It's kind of the thing that keeps you going."

Resting at the other end of the spectrum is Digger, whose enthusiasm for toys continues to grow. "I love the toy industry," he says. "I do. When we sell the big property that puts us over the top in the future, I'll want to keep doing toy work." Digger envisions a time when artists in the toy business receive notoriety on a par with comic book creators. "The industry is still in sort of an embryonic stage. It still has so much further to go."

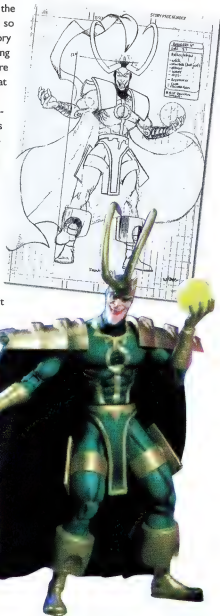

Digger maintains a bright outlook on his chosen profession. A huge Spider-Man fan as a kid, the chance to sculpt Spidey in the recent Web Traps line was almost thrilling beyond words. "After I found out about Spider-Man, I was on a high for months," he says. "I don't want that feeling to go away."

In other words, it was a dream come true.

WITH JUST A LITTLE WIRE AND SUPER SCULPEY, CLAYBURN MOORE BRINGS LIFE TO LADY DEMON

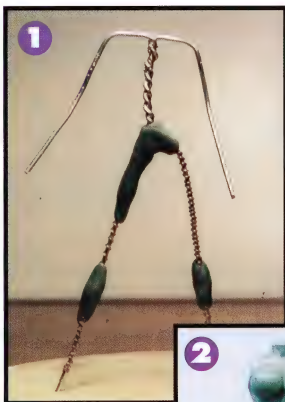

She's the most beautiful 6 1/4-inch woman you're ever going to see. Meet Lady Demon, the sultry but deadly version of Chaos! Comics' mega-popular Lady Death, and the fourth installment in this season's most anticipated action figure release: Chaos! figures from Moore Action Collectibles.

The Lady Demon action figure comes from the minds of two of the more innovative thinkers in comics today, Chaos! Comics front-man Brian Pulido and sculptor extraordinaire Clayburn Moore, also president of M.A.C. Having already built a very successful career as a statue sculptor, Moore joined up with Chaos! Comics founder Brian Pulido and started talking action figures. Not just your run-of-the-mill action figures, though. Moore wanted to create action figures that weren't just toys, but miniature works of art.

A few months later, Moore Action Collectibles, an offshoot of Moore's company, Moore Creations, was born, with Chaos! Comics figures comprising the debut toy line.

The first assortment of Chaos! figures includes Evil Ernie, Lady Death, Purgatori and Lady Demon. Moore knew Lady Demon was going to be a challenge when he first saw her—a brimstone babe with dramatic horns, a teeny tiny costume and a sexy sneer radiating attitude. Never one to pass on a challenge, Moore grabbed his tools, picked out the perfect lump of clay and headed off to make magic. Luckily, he let ToyFare come with him as long as we promised not to touch.

Starting from Scratch

The first step in creating Lady Demon is simple: figure out what the heck to sculpt. Thanks to extensive discussions with Pulido, Moore already knows what character he's sculpting, but the pose and the overall look and feel of the figure are completely left up to him.

"I want Lady Demon to look like Lady Death has been transformed into this almost Amazonian monstress of a woman," Moore says. "She needs to be more physically intimidating and dangerous than either Lady Death or Purgatori, and at the same time, she needs to look very sensual and erotic. To make this work, I decided to give her a half-smile, which is particularly challenging since I've never attempted anything like it before on a face that's only about a quarter-inch from cheekbone to cheekbone."

Once the basic character idea is set in Moore's head, the pose using that pose for that long, there's something tricky about it."

Despite the challenges of the pose and the facial expression he's after, Moore is ready to go. "Let me preface everything by saying that I approach this in a less traditional way than other action figure sculptors," Moore says. "One of the things I butted heads with other companies about is my sculpting material. They wanted me to use a wax mixed with talcum powder, but I wanted to sculpt them like a regular sculpture, using a material that I work best in. Traditionally, the toy-making process is almost more of a carving process than a molding process."

Preferring to use his own materials, particularly a popular modeling putty, Moore makes a few inquiries. "I speak with our manufacturer, and ask if I could sculpt the figure with Super Sculpey, make molds from that, and present them with master prototypes instead of the original sculpture," Moore says. "They say yes, and guarantee they'll be able to reproduce whatever level of detail I present them with."

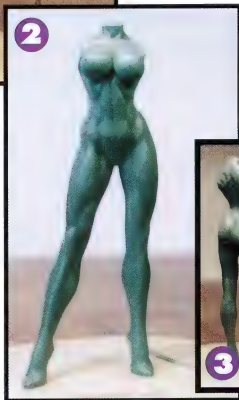

The preliminaries out of the way, now it's really time to get Moore's hands dirty.

All Wired Up

"First I build the 1:1 armature out of aluminum wire," Moore says. "In other words, we don't sculpt larger figures and reduce them to make the actual figures. This way, the molds for the master prototypes will be taken directly from my original sculpture. The armature is about 6 1/4 inches tall, which in my mind is a figure six feet tall."

"After fixing the armature in the final pose the figure will have, I build on the Super Sculpey, which gives me the basic weight and shape that I want," Moore says. "The figure looks a little bit heavier than she will be when she's finished, because my process is more one of building up than honing down. The rough figure has no hair or head detail at this point. I've just slapped on some Sculpey to see what hair shape is most dynamic for the particular pose I'm working on. Then I bake it to make it a little harder, and begin to sculpt the figure standing there in her particular pose. Basically, from there it's really simple drudge work: I build it up and sculpt the body and the legs so it looks human."

When Moore means sculpt the figure, he means, well, sculpt the figure, keeping the emphasis on the quality of the work. Even though the final product will be a collectible toy made out of plastic, Moore approaches each has to be considered. If you look at action figures today, there are plenty of easy poses to choose from, but Moore settles on the difficult but classic contra posta pose: the standing figure with its weight resting on one hip, while the opposite leg extends at a slight angle, giving the figure a slight S-curve. And as Moore can attest, sculpting a contra posta figure is no simple job.

"Donatello's Saint Mark was the first sculpture to use that pose in over 1,400 years, because it's so hard to understand and capture," Moore says, his classical sculpture training shining through. "You've got to figure that if no one even tried to sculpt new figure as if he were rendering a Catholic saint out of the finest Italian marble. "At this point, I'm just making the sculpture, but at the same time, I know there will be articulation in it," Moore says. "My opinion is that we worry about the sculpture first, and make that as good as we can, then articulate them later."

While Moore realizes the obvious importance of articulation, he's not overly worried about it. "The one thing that I learned with the Lady Death action figure is that the human form will take care of itself," Moore says. "When I articulated and twisted the Lady Death figure, she actually looked like a real person running, doing splits, whatever. That's one of the most fascinating things I've learned about this business. You don't have to let the articulation dictate to you what the figure will look like, because the human form will hold true to itself."

Moore continues to build up the armature with Super Sculpey and sculpt until he's satisfied with the look. "I go ahead and build up the body and the arms until it looks good, and then I cut the arms off at the shoulders, since it's really easy to build a simple articulation onto the shoulder," Moore says. "I don't worry about the head just yet either, so I leave the roughed-out head in place. After taking the arms off, I start to sculpt the whole torso and legs with blunt tools, all the while getting approval for the piece from Brian [Pulido] at Chaos! at specific steps."

Full Figure

Surprisingly, throughout the torso-sculpting process, Moore uses relatively little reference material; an occasional glance at the original comic here, or some photos there, but not much more. "I don't like to use female bodybuilders as models," Moore says. "They're too big for what I'm trying to accomplish. What I end up using are pictures of aerobics champions, since they have the right level of toning and musculature that I'm after, and often stand in a contra posta pose as well."

And now, a moment about the controversial side of sculpting the female action figure: breasts. As with everything else so far, Moore stresses realism. "From a sculpting point of view, breasts are essentially just weights on a rib cage that aren't much different from a man's except that a man's shoulders are broader, and his pectoral muscles are bigger," Moore explains for the uninitiated. "I rough in breasts for Chaos!'s approval, because they expect to see them on the figure, but once I get approval, I remove them, sculpt the rest of the torso, and then add them at a very late point in the sculpting process."

Throughout the sculpting, Moore will occasionally videotape the figure with rulers standing beside it, highlighting the areas he's most recently focused upon. Afterward, the videotape goes to Chaos! HQ in Scottsdale, Ariz., where Pulido gives it a thumbs-up. Approval granted, Moore continues with the work.

Along with the rest of the torso, Moore sculpts Lady Demon's legs with his own special twist. "I make her feet a little bit bigger, because I want her to have more of a hoof-like look," he says. "It's a very subtle thing that most people probably won't notice, but again, it's something I'm able to do because of what I learned sculpting Lady Death and Purgatori: You can play with the feet a little bit without affecting the rest of the sculpture."

In addition to getting the anatomy just right, the character's costume (or lack thereof, in Lady Demon's case) has to be sculpted on the body as well. For the most part, Moore easily sculpts the contours of the costume, adding

Vital Stats

NAME: Clayburn Moore

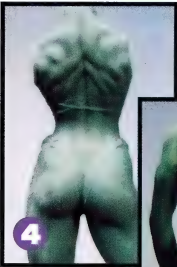

OCCUPATION: President/CEO of Moore Creations Inc. / Moore Action Collectibles Inc. Clay's in charge of licensing, sculpting, producing and marketing statuettes, action figures and 3-D products.

BIRTHDAY: November 10. Clay won't divulge the year.

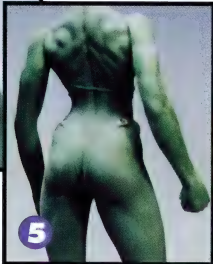

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: "Being told by [fantasy artist] Frank Frazetta that I had done a good job in capturing his work on [the statue] Frazetta's Princess."

FAVORITE WORK OF HIS OWN: Frazetta's Princess and the Witchblade statues. "I learned so much about the human figure to do the Princess from studying Frazetta's work. The Witchblade was my own design. I tried to capture the essence of the figure and it works as a sculpture from every angle, which is rare."

FAVORITE ARTISTIC WORK OF ANOTHER: The Nike of Samothrace (That's one of those classical sculptures. It has nothing to do with sneakers.)

(4) and (5) Finer details—like Lady Demon's scant thong bikini—are sculpted directly onto the figure after the basic form is established for maximum effect.

erence," he says. "The hands are also a challenge, because along with the face, they're all the expression we can get out of a sculpture, so they have to be in a pose that's almost saying something just by how they look."

Curious about the time elapsed since Moore began sculpting? It's probably taken color touch for the rings that hold her charming fanged-skull chastity belt in place.

Finishing up the costume, however, Moore runs into a small problem. "In the comics, her costume has all these tendrils hanging off of her arms and legs," Moore says. "I feel that they would be completely superfluous to the figure, so I want to dispense with them entirely. After a talk with Brian explaining things, he's very understanding about that, given the increase in production costs it would've entailed, plus the fact that we could've only made them in plastic, so they wouldn't have come off too well."

"Another thing I wanted to do was to make Lady Demon's chest, for lack of a better term, hit you right between the eyes," Moore says. "So when I'm ready to add the breasts back to the torso, I give them a sort of Wonderbra look, which is clearly different from the Lady Death or Purgatori figures."

Late in the torso sculpting, Moore hones the muscles on the figure with a small loop tool, giving Lady Demon that well-cut look, but not quite as defined as Purgatori.

Torso complete, Moore moves to Lady Demon's arms. By the time Moore is ready to sculpt the arms, he's gotten final approval for the torso from Chaos!, and has baked the armless figure, hardening the Sculpey to a rock-like consistency. "By baking Lady Demon, I don't have to worry about the softness of the figure when I'm adding the arms, or working with their positioning," Moore explains.

Surprisingly, the arms are one of the very few body parts for which Moore uses reference materials when sculpting. "I've yet to meet a sculptor in this business who can sculpt a realistic, muscular human arm without ref-longer than you think to get to this point.

"Sculpting the legs and torso takes about a week to 10 days, given the intricacies of her particular costume," Moore says. "The arms and hands are about a day each, so after about 11 or 12 days, I've got the entire thing just about finished except for the head."

More Than a Pretty Face

Moore is quick to point out that he doesn't treat the head like he does the arms. "I don't cut off the roughed-in head and sculpt it like I did with the arms," he says. "I leave the head that I've roughed in to the proper size and weight on the figure, then I sculpt another head separately. The new head starts as a lump of Super Sculpey on a small armature wire, like holding a popsicle on a stick. I sculpt the head in my hand, and keep comparing it to the roughed-out one on the figure, so I don't take off too much, and mess up the balance between the head and the body."

A particular challenge to Moore with Lady Demon's head was the fact that protruding from the middle of her forehead are two enormous, menacing horns.

"To sculpt Lady Demon's head, I mock on little Billy goat horns," Moore says. "If I had done the full, looped horns, I wouldn't have been able to sculpt around them. The main challenge with the horns, though, isn't so much the horns themselves, but sculpting the hair around the horns so it looks good. When it comes time to add the real horns, I sculpt them separately, since I knew the placement from the mocked-up ones. I place them directly on the forehead of the prototype without any trouble."

Another tough point for Moore is the character's hair. The comic version of Lady Demon had metric tons of the stuff. It was everywhere—something that's not very practical on a 6 1/4-inch action figure. "The challenge that I found with both Lady Death and Lady Demon is that they have huge hair in the comics," Moore says. "That has to be modified since the weight of that much plastic hair would pull the figure backwards. Another consideration I have with the hair is that I find the musculature of the female back just fascinating, and so, frankly, I want everybody to see it on my sculptures. With all this in mind, I shorten Lady Demon's hair a little compared to Lady Death, so it looks slightly different from Lady Death's and also so it shows off her back musculature."

Moore completes the head by fine-tuning Lady Demon's face, adding the enigmatic half-smile he decided upon when he was conceptualizing the piece. "The mouth is a pretty tough feature, and it gives me a little trouble to get just right," Moore says. "But I finally get the perfect combination of sexy and confident that I was looking for by using some really fine tools."

Horns, hair, and facial expression completed, it's time to attach Lady Demon's head to her body. Again, it's not as easy as it sounds. "When the true head is finished, I cut off the roughed-in one, and replace it with the completely sculpted head," Moore says. "By the time I attach the head to the body, everything except the head and the hair has been baked. Then I put the head on the body, shape the various neck points, and make sure the hair fits properly against the figure. At that point, I've covered the figure with tinfoil to keep the hair from drying to the body when the figure undergoes its final bake, which would prevent articulation of the head. Everything in place, I give her the final bake. Since the head is the last thing on the figure to complete, I tape it and send the tape to Chaos! for final approval once it's done baking."

The Big Finish

For a lot of sculptors, the process would end here and the finished figure would be sent off to the manufacturer, who would then make molds from the figure. Not at M.A.C. "After the final bake and approval, we cast the master mold for the figure right here," Moore says. "Someone here, often my brother, will paint the prototype so the manufacturer can see what coloration we want the final product to have, and then we send the prototypes to the factory and they take it from there." About three rounds of revisions (called "shots") later, the figure is ready to go into production, bringing to a close about a month's worth of work.

Moore doesn't have time to sit back and rest on his laurels, however. There's always more to start sculpting; for instance, the second Chaos! line has to be planned and preliminary designs roughed out. "We're looking at doing another Lady Death, probably in her platinum battle armor, as well as one of the major male characters, either Homicide or Cremator," Moore says. "We're also probably going to do Vandalia and Purgatori in her Egyptian outfit, although we'll probably hold her off for another assortment to maintain the strength of the line."

When prodded, Moore can be coaxed into taking a critical look at his work. "When I look at Lady Demon, I see the figure, plus I see everything that I learned in the figures that I sculpted before her," Moore says. "Lady Demon is probably one of the best female figures that I've ever done, and as far as I'm concerned, it's the best of the bunch of this assortment of Chaos! figures. I'm very, very proud of the piece, I hope collectors will be as happy with it as I am!" TF

Freelance writer Matthew Brady developed quite a little crush on Lady Demon while working on this feature. He'd like to be known as "Plastic Fantastic Lover" from now on. Freaka.

Taa-Dah! The final product: a fully sculpted Lady Demon, painted, articulated and ready for action!

Moore's Muse

What inspires Moore when he's sculpting? Classical music, and people dressed in togas speaking Latin? Hardly.

"It may sound silly, but to get me in the mood, I'll cut out good pictures from the comics, and paste them to a board in front of me," Moore says. "That at least gets the figure on my mind, so I can start the creative process of creating the figure."

Once his "creative process"—coming up with the pose and the look of the figure—is completed, Moore looks for anything that will keep his mind occupied while he sculpts. "Really, it's pretty mindless once you get the figure set out in your head," Moore says. "I'll talk on the phone, listen to music, talk radio, movies, anything."

Moore's favorite musical picks? Howabout a mixed bag of the Moody Blues, Van Morrison, Pink Floyd, the Wallflowers, the Onion Fields, Enya, INXS and Scottish bagpipe music. Moore's movie or television picks are just as eclectic: "The Usual Suspects," "Spartacus," "The Great Escape," "Reservoir Dogs," "Law and Order" or CNN.

Also, Moore has a collection of inspirational pieces in his workplace, some which would probably surprise more than a few visitors. "I have a couple McFarlane action figures around that I really like, such as the Viking Spawn and Maxx," Moore says. "I also have the Predator Clan Leader figure here too, along with artwork by [Frank] Frazetta, [Roy] Krenkel and Brom, and of course, all of my sculpting books help out as well."

And when the going gets really tough, Moore reaches for the masters. "I'll look at works by Michaelangelo to see how he did it," Moore says. "I also look at works by American sculptors like Frazier and Huntington. There's always something I can learn there, and it slows me down and makes me think about what I'm doing." ■ MB

Jamie Madrox, best known as an X-Men ally (and one-time member of X-Factor), has the power to—POP!—create exact duplicates of himself to help him kick supervillain butt. And, as the last member of X-Factor to be made into an action figure, you can add him to your Havok, Strong Guy, Wolfsbane, Polaris and Quicksilver toys to complete the set!

Here's what you get:

- A brand-new, never-before-seen, exceptionally crafted Madrox action figure that we specially commissioned from Toy Biz just for this issue!
- A Wizard Press exclusive! This figure will never be made available through the mass market (that means Toys R Us, Kay-Bee, Wal-Mart—none of those guys will ever carry him!)

Don't miss this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to experience the mirth 'n' mayhem of Madrox!

It's just a mere five clams (okay, plus three more for postage and handling). But don't forget—getting things in the mail is a reason to go on living! So send that moolah in today for your limited-edition, exclusive Toy Biz Madrox action figure!

The Many Sides of the Law:

No reproductions of this coupon will be accepted. Isn't that ironic? This coupon must be sent in the accompanying envelope, one coupon per action figure. Sorry, but Madrox action figures are limited to only three per household. You may put additional coupons in the same envelope. Remit by check or money order only. Canadian orders remit $10.00, other foreign orders remit $13.00. All payment must be in U.S. funds drawn on a U.S. bank. Y'know, we'd mention how cool it would be to have multiple Multiple Men, but it'd sound like a cheap marketing ploy. So we won't. Make all checks payable to Wizard Press. Offer good only while supplies last. Please allow eight to 12 weeks for delivery. Changes of address will not be forwarded unless Wizard Press is notified in writing by December 20, 1997.

TOY STORY

A LOOK AT ACTION FIGURES FROM YEARS PAST

UNIVERSAL MONSTERS

DRACULA. THE FRANKENSTEIN MONSTER. THE MUMMY. THE WOLF MAN.

The names read like a monster who's who list. And their images are firmly cemented in our collective imagination: Boris Karloff's flat-topped Frankenstein creature, Bela Lugosi's Hungarian Dracula. They aren't just characters from classic literature. Over 50 years after their appearance in dozens of Universal Pictures monster films, the "Universal Monsters" are just as recognizable today as they were when they first frightened audiences. That's why the toy license is still around, even though the last film was made in 1955. It's why Remco released its Universal Monsters figures in 1980 and 1983, and it's why these toys, and others like them, are still valued collector's items to this day.

Universal Pictures bought the rights to Dracula in 1930, 33 years after the character had first appeared in Bram Stoker's seminal vampire novel. Bela Lugosi was cast in the role that would define his career, and the first Universal monster movie was released in February 1931. "Dracula" was a tremendous success, so Universal immediately set to work on a new monster flick; not a sequel, because sequelitis hadn't taken hold of Hollywood yet, but an entirely new monster movie: "Frankenstein." The film starred Boris Karloff and broke all box office records when it opened in November 1931.

Universal knew they had struck gold and would go on to release over two dozen more monster movies, original concepts and sequels. All of them were hits, introducing such horror icons as the Mummy, the Invisible Man, the Wolf Man, and the Phantom of the Opera (in films of the same name).

The last Universal monster showed up in 1954's "Creature from the Black Lagoon," and the last Universal monster pic was, ironically, the comedically-slanted "Abbott and Costello Meet the Mummy" in 1955.

Two decades later, the original films from the '30s were still incredibly popular. That's because in a savvy move, Universal re-released them in pairs as Saturday matinee double-features in the '50s, and they were just as popular as they'd been in their heyday—so popular, in fact, that a toy company decided to take a chance and release the first Universal Monsters figure. Well, okay, it wasn't a toy company. More precisely it was the Aurora Modeling Company, which naturally made models, not action figures.

Aurora released Frankenstein's Monster in 1961. It was so wildly successful that the company released another dozen in the series, most based on Universal Monsters. A few other Universal Monsters toy licenses showed up over the years, including Azrak-Hamway Inc.'s Official World Famous Super-Monsters in 1970. And when AHI acquired Remco a few years later, they released the Remco Universal Monsters.

Remco's first set of Universal Monsters debuted in 1980 as 9-inch figures with Dracula, the Wolfman, the Mummy and the Frankenstein Monster. They were neat figures that managed to capture the feel of the classic movies, but they didn't sell very well. How could these classic movies compete with the ground-breaking special effects driven sci-fi films of the day? The answer? They couldn't. Two more figures were released, but in limited quantities: The Phantom of the Opera and Creature from the Black Lagoon. All of the toys are rare items today, but the latter two are the hardest to find.

Remco wasn't thought yet. In 1983, the company took another stab at the Universal Monsters, but this time the action figures were radically different. Okay, maybe not radically. They were, well...smaller. Mego's once popular 8-inch style was out and Star Wars' 3 3/4-inch design became the industry standard. And thus, Remco used the same six characters in a size compatible with the most popular toys of the period. Later that same year, Remco released a second series. Sort of. Actually, it was a repaint: all Remco did was simply coat the hands and faces of its figures with glow-in-the-dark paint. The company also added a new glow-in-the-dark Monsterizer (a lab to restore life to Frankenstein's monster) and a Play Case to hold the figures.

There were a few minor Universal Monsters toys that came out over the years since Remco's brief foray, but nothing of any great significance. Until now, that is. The undead monsters are showing new signs of life. In conjunction with the U.S. Post Office, which has released a beautiful series of Universal Monsters stamps, Hasbro New Ventures has created new Universal Monsters figures available only through the holiday J.C. Penney catalog. These figures (the Mummy, Frankenstein's Monster and the Wolfman) simply look incredible. They're highly detailed and capture the likenesses of the original actors perfectly.

But wait, there's more. Universal has also announced plans for "House of Frankenstein," a forthcoming TV mini-series. In it, werewolves and vampires terrorize modern Los Angeles, while an evil millionaire searches for Frankenstein's monster to use as the centerpiece for his new nightclub. This might be exciting news for monster continuity geeks; while the films may not have all made sense, the Frankenstein cinematic releases each picked up the storyline where the previous left off. So will the monster be the same creature portrayed by Boris Karloff over 60 years ago? Are the vampires and werewolves the modern-day descendants of Dracula and the Wolfman? Whatever the answer, the Universal Monsters have managed to come back from the dead many times...and it looks like it's about time for another resurrection. TF

Freelance writer Dallas Middaugh has returned from the dead just once: He left the faucet running in his apartment. Duh.

CHOP SHOP

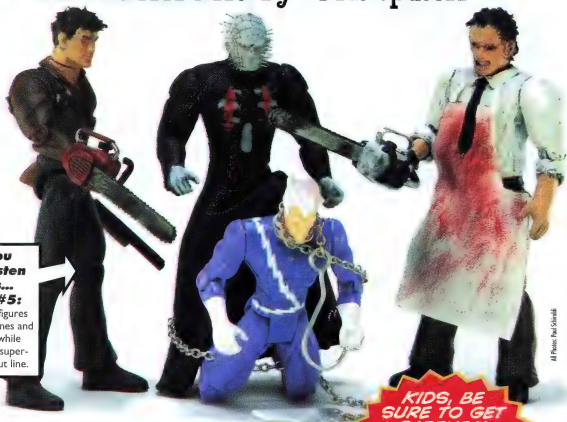

CRAFTING YOUR OWN HOMEMADE ACTION FIGURES

OH, THE HORROR! By Chris Spaseff

Why you should listen to Chris...

Reason #5:

He built these figures out of Meaty Bones and Tupperware while standing in the supermarket checkout line.

Hello, customizing freaks!

It's Halloween time, the one time of the year an unhealthy obsession with blood, guts and gore seems perfectly acceptable! This month we're going to sway a bit from our natural "Chop Shop" progression and discuss the timely topic of horror figures.

I created three spooky-scary custom figures this month, and I started each of them with Quicksilver from Toy Biz's X-Men: Mutant Armor series. Of Quicksilver gives us a good basic body to start from, but there's another bonus—I found him on sale

Ingredients

Here's the customizing supplies you'll need for this month's installment. If it's not available at your local hobby or craft store, we've noted another source.

1. X-Acto handle with #11 blades
2. Rotary dremel tool and assorted bits (hardware store)
3. Sandpaper in various grits: 80, 100, 150 (hardware store)
4. Sanding block (home improvement or beauty supply store)
5. Super Sculptey
6. Cyanoacrylate instant glue
7. Accelerator for glue
8. Dental tools

KIDS, BE SURE TO GET PARENTAL CONSENT BEFORE YOU BEGIN!

9. Safety goggles (hardware store)
10. Heat gun or hair dryer (hardware store)
11. Dowel (hardware store)
12. Plywood (hardware store)
13. Silicone (hardware store)
14. Assorted model parts
15. Plastic coffee stirrers (grocery store)
16. Airbrush (hardware store)
17. Spandex (fabric store)
18. Thin canvas (fabric store)
19. Spray-on automotive primer (hardware store)
20. 26-gauge beading wire (hardware store)

recently for $5 a pop. There's nothing like keeping your customizing costs to a minimum!

From a little Super Sculpey, some assorted wood pieces for the killing devices and a few leftover toy parts, I've turned my Quicksilvers into Pinhead from the "Hellraiser" movies; Leatherface from the "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" franchise; and Ash from "Army of Darkness" and the "Evil Dead" flicks. That's a high-mileage mutant!

As always, assemble your reference materials first. I used movie magazines so I could study them closely, but in a pinch, just watching the movies and taking notes can give you all the info you need.

Ash from "Army of Darkness" is a man of many accessories, but it only takes a few basic steps to round out his arsenal.

GIMME SOME SUGAR, BABY

Since Quicksilver's head doesn't look much like the square-jawed Ash, I used the head of Jack "Cadillac" Tenrec from Tyco's Cadillacs and Dinosaurs toy line. Since he'll be holding a gun, I also used the hand of a Shadow movie figure I dug up somewhere. Believe me, nobody's hoarding those things.

Working carefully, pry the figures' torsos apart with a small flat-bladed screwdriver and remove the heads so you can swap 'em. The two heads are slightly different sizes—a small amount of carving is needed, and the original knob from Jack's head needs to be replaced with a screw. After several test fits, place Jack's head into the Quicksilver torso and glue the body back together. As always, make sure not to get any glue on the joints. You want to leave the "action" in your action figures.

Carefully cut off Quicksilver's hands at the wrist. Ash's right hand, you'll remember, got lopped off in the movies, but he later built a bionic steel hand, which you can recreate by building up some Sculpey around the wrist of your severed hand. Then pop off Ash's bionic hand whenever you attach the chainsaw!

Trim down the left hand from the Shadow figure and glue it onto your custom figure. Then use a small amount of Sculpey to smooth the seam together.

Apply on a thin coating of the Sculpey and, using your dental tools, form Ash's collar and shirt. Note where the rips and tears should go—we're striving for authenticity here. A thin application of Sculpey on his arm and legs will smooth out the rippling muscles and form his shirt sleeve and pants.

After heat-setting the Sculpey, I formed the belts. Ash has a belt around his waist and one around his chest and arm. Be sure to keep the heat gun or hair dryer moving so you don't scorch the figure. Make the belts by rolling out a thin pancake of modeling material with a dowel, and slicing off thin strips to use as the belts. To make the buckles, roll a small amount of material between your fingers, forming a small string, and form buckles out of it. As a final touch to the figure, I dabbed some silicone on his head to rough up his hair a little bit.

To make the chainsaw, I took some thin plywood (cardboard works just as well) and cut three pieces to form the blade. By making the center layer about 1/16-inch wider than the outside layers, it's easy to get the effect of the serrated edge without a lot of intricate carving. Simply use a small file to cut notches around the center layer to give the effect of the small teeth of the blade. Add a small piece of scrap wood for the body of the chainsaw, and drill a hole in the end of it the same diameter as Ash's forearm. I used some model parts to form the handle, gas cap, pull starter and the blade gear cover of the chainsaw. A quick spray of black primer and a few dabs of paint and it's done. I'll cover painting techniques at a bit more length in the future.

As far as Ash's shotgun, all I used were some small pieces of wood and two short sections of a round plastic coffee stirrer. It'll take some experimentation with carving to get the weapons you want, but the elements are fairly basic.

PINS AND NEEDLES

Quicksilver can be customized into the nasty "Hellraiser" star Pinhead by adding Super Sculpey to bulk up his chest area and using your dental tools to form his corset. Add the little details, such as the straps that cover his chest openings, using the same techniques we used for Ash's belts. You'll need to find a suitable hand to replace Quicksilver's small, deformed hand. Pinhead's arms will need some modeling material around them to make the sleeves of his costume. Use the dental tools to texture the sleeves, then heat-set everything you've done so far.

In my version, I used Quicksilver's original head, though with a little searching you could probably find one closer to Pinhead's size. To craft the head I started by carving off Quicksilver's wind-blown hair and applying a thin coat of Super Sculpey to smooth his head and give me an easy way to carve the lines in his face. I then heat-set his head, taking extreme care to keep the heat gun moving. Believe me, if you ever melt your hard work by accident, you'll never make the same mistake again. I then sprayed black sandable automotive primer in very light coats to completely seal the figure.

Scrape Pinhead's corset around the bottom where the skirt will go so you can glue on the skirt. I used black spandex and some cianoacrylate to make the skirt, then applied some spray starch to form it.

Airbrush a mixture of white and very light blue thinned-down acrylic paint on all the exposed skin areas. Now, get ready for the pure, unadulterated hell of gluing all the pins on his face. I used teeny (approximately 1/8-inch) lengths of 26-gauge beading wire and glued them on with cyanoacrylate using tweezers. This is a very time-intensive procedure requiring a lot of patience, and even when you're done, the pins can still fall off quite easily. Other solutions, such as drilling holes for the pins or inserting the pins into a soft layer of putty, can prove even more difficult.

A chain from a cheap necklace, a piece of wire bent into a hook and a small piece of wood cut into the shape of a blade can easily be turned into Pinhead's torture devices.

MASSACRE FRICASSEE

The first steps to create "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" fashion plate Leatherface are to carve off some of Quicksilver's hair and to replace his warped mitt with something shaped more like a hand. Follow the same steps as for Ash and Pinhead.

Now it's back to the Sculpey. Smooth some of it over his face to get the mask started, then use the dental tools to cut out some of the material over his eyes and mouth. Form his misshapen ears using little blobs of Sculpey and your tools. With a ghoul this gruesome, it's hard to mess up. Add a thin coating of material on the back of his head to even it out with the rest of the face, then heat-set the Sculpey. Apply some Sculpey to his torso to give him a gut—after all, this guy's diet is mostly red meat. Add some material to form his collar and shirt, then heat-set his torso. On his arms, smooth material over them to make sleeves and rolled-up portions on his forearms. Carve and sand his boots to convert them to Leatherface-style cowboy boots, then add some putty on his legs to form his pants—try to transition them from his belly. Heat-set the whole shebang and you're ready to move on.

Create his curly hair by dabbing some silicone on with a toothpick and swirling it around so it looks unkempt and messy. For the apron, lay out some cotton material, perhaps some thin canvas, and use white glue to stiffen the material. After the glue dries, cut the tie and apron out of this material. You'll want to paint the tie and apron before they're glued onto the figure; it's always much easier. Then drybrush some blood and black stains over the apron to suggest his diabolical deeds.

Follow the Ash directions above for Leatherface's chainsaw. You'll simply need to add a handle to the end instead of a hole.

I hope y'all enjoyed this side trip into horror characters. Next month we'll return to our regularly scheduled programming. See you in 30! TF

Arizona freelance writer Chris Spaseff (unusual@goodnet.com) thought "Texas Chainsaw Massacre Part 2" was pretty good, as documentaries go.

(Right) Capturing Leatherface's slightly bloated physique helps disguise the original figure's body.

(Below) The same set of steps can produce two chainsaws with very different looks—it's all in the details.

THE HALLOWED HALLS OF FAN-MADE ACTION FIGURES

Special thanks to
DAN JURGENS

Remember the "You Can Never Get Enough Spider-Man" contest from ToyFare #1? Of course you do! Customizin' folks took one look at the grand prize we were danglin' in front of their noses, and they went to work. And how! We got boatloads of entries and we're gonna show the tippity-top coolest of 'em here! This month's grand prize winner will take home EVERY GOSH-DARN Toy Biz Spider-Man action figure EVER MADE! And as if that wasn't more'n enough, we're throwing in a copy of Sensational Spider-Man #1, autographed by writer/penciler Dan Jurgens. The 10 runners-up will each snare a random Spider-Man action figure, plus an aforementioned signed copy of Sensational Spider-Man #1! Keep entering our "Homemade Heroes" contests each month, kids—it pays off big-time!

COUCH POTATO SPIDER-MAN

Eric Dlugokinski, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada

A Spider-Man we can all identify with! The repainted Playskool props add ambience, but lazy Spidey himself—comprised of a Sea-Hunter Spider-Man torso, Savage Land Angel arms and legs, a Web Traps Spider-Man head, modified Ninja Wolverine shorts and a little paint—makes this entry a winner! And while he'll never make it to the animated series, he'd certainly fit right in on an episode of "Cops"!

WAL-MART GREETER SPIDER-MAN

"Pope" Jon-Paul, Mount Union, Penn.

Ever wonder what odd jobs the Spider-Clone took while he wandered across America? Two guys named Jon and Paul (who collectively seem to form a pope. Whatever.) show us the dark side of heartland America. Mego Spidey making six bucks an hour? Horrors!

WONDER-SPIDEY

Jonathan Presby, Santa Clara, Calif.

The recent DC/Marvel Amalgam comics inspired Jonathan to dream up his own combination. Somehow, we don't think this character would've sold as many copies as, say, Dark Claw Adventures, but hey, who's to say? Wonder-Spidey was a Super-Poseable Spider-Man before a little contour putty and paint turned him into a real Amazing Amazon!

WILD-WEST SPIDER-MAN

William Burns, Cupertino, Calif.

Yee-haw! William used a Web Traps Spider-Man head, a Ghost Rider Blaze body sans trenchcoat, six-shooters from a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles Wild West Raphael, a hat from a Playmobil figure, custom-modified boots and some assorted spare parts to create his cowpoke Spidey! But where's Burlesque Show Rhino?

GRAND PRIZE WINNER HOCKEY SPIDEY

Jeff Andrew, North Bay, Ontario, Canada

Our Neighbors to the North sure do love their hockey! Jeff made this Toronto Maple Leafs Spidey out of a Spider-Armor Spider-Man figure and Montreal Canadiens Carnage is a Carnage Unleashed. Venom II made the scene as a referee. All the costumes were hand-sewn and the hockey sticks were made from the remnants of devoured Popsicles.

Jeff says the whole project took him two days. A devoted Maple Leafs fan, Jeff says the decision to pit Spidey against a Montreal Carnage was a natural. "If you're a Canadian, you understand the hatred between these two teams," Jeff explains. Venom made a logical choice as ref: "He hates them both equally."

And check out those unruly spectators! Wonder if Bo Duke's cheering for the Leafs or the Habs?

MORE RUNNERS-UP!

Think that's all the winners? Heck, you couldn't be more wrong! Here's the rest of this month's runners-up. We only wish we had space to show all their great entries!

Rich Dufresne of Barre, Vt., snagged a prize for his too-cool amalgam of Ghost Rider and Spider-Man: "Ghost Spider"!

"To infinity and beyond!" "Spidey Lightyear" lifted Joseph Leck of Indianapolis, Ind., into the prize stratosphere.

Oh, man. "Proctologist Spidey" shoved Jeff Oleson of Beaverton, Ore., to the depths of our prize vault.

As if the clone storyline wasn't scary enough, Christina Trott of Nyack, N.Y., took a final slap at Peter Parker's poor dead doppelganger with her entry, "Ben Reilly with Degrating Clone Head."

Thank God Marvel doesn't have an "Elseworlds" line. "Luke Spiderwalker and Darth Venom" by Jonathan Moisan of Muncie, Ind., made for some great figures, but we don't wanna see any Rocket Racer Ewoks.

"Pulp Fiction Spidey" by Brandon Gardner of Cullman, Ala., rounds out our runners-up. Very Tarantino-esque!

TF

Thanks to all who entered!

Think you can wage battle in our "Homemade Heroes" arena? Check out the "Homemade Heroes" contest on page 64, jam-packed with scads of neat stuff you can win just by turnin' your favorite characters into creepy-scary monsters!

TOYFARE PRESENTS:

THE "HOMEMADE HEROES" MONSTER MASH CONTEST

Freddy © 1997 New Line Cinema. Licensed by Toyfare.

In honor of Halloween, ToyFare wants YOU to take your favorite superhero and turn 'em into a monstrous action figure. Y'know...what if Captain America became a flesh-hungry werewolf? What if Batman became a bloodthirsty vampire? What if the Hulk became a brain-chompin' zombie? All you have to do is grab some tools, scoop up a fistful of toys and create your own monsterized superhero action figure!

Grand Prize (1): The most creatively depraved winner walks off with a VCR and a library of the 10 damn scariest movies of all time: "Alien," "The Silence of the Lambs," "The Exorcist," "The Omen," "Scream," "John Carpenter's The Thing," "A Nightmare on Elm Street," "Halloween," "Jaws" and "Poltergeist"!

Second Prize (4): Four runners-up will each receive a $25 gift certificate for Blockbuster Video. Hey, you can go buy whichever movie floats your boat with the dough!

Monstrous Legalities

No purchase necessary. Contest is open to anyone except employees of Wizard Press, their immediate families and whoever sends in a vampire Vampirilla or an undead Spawn. You are a doodie-head. Print your name, date of birth, address, city, state, zip and telephone number with area code on the official entry form or a 3-by-5-inch index card, and attach the form or card to your photo entry. Enter as many times as you like. Mail each entry separately to: Monster Mash Contest, c/o Wizard Press, P.O. Box 118, Congers, NY 10920-0118. No mechanical reproductions of completed forms are accepted, but you can photocopy the entry form before filling it out if you don't want to mess up your magazine. All entries become property of Wizard Press and none will be returned. All taxes (federal, state and local, if any) will be the responsibility of the prize winners. Wizard reserves the right to substitute prizes. Prizes are awarded in the names of the contest winners and are not transferable. All entries may see print in future Wizard Press publications. Every time we see that throwing-up-on-the-priest scene from "The Exorcist" we get the heebie-jeebies. Offer void where prohibited, regulated or restricted by law in a manner inconsistent with the purposes and rules hereof. All entries must be received at contest headquarters by November 28, 1997. Wizard Press is not responsible for lost, late, misdirected or mutilated entries. Odds of winning will be determined by the number of valid entries received prior to the closing date of the contest. Prize winners will be selected based on originality and creativity from among all properly completed entries by Wizard Press. Winning entries will be selected on or about December 15, 1997.

For a list of winners, available after December 15, 1997, send a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Monster Mash Winners List, c/o Wizard Press, P.O. Box 118, Congers, NY 10920-0118

MONSTER MASH CONTEST ENTRY FORM

So create your figure(s), set them up in some neat poses and take several clean, clear color photographs. If you create packaging for them, photograph them in and out of the packaging and for God's sake, no Polaroids! Attach to the back of EACH of your photographs the following info: your name, address, phone number (including area code), the name of the figure you made and the list of toys/tools you made it out of. Then mail the whole kit 'n' kaboodle to:

Top 10 Hottest Action Figures

BY CONTACTING HUNDREDS OF RETAILERS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY, TOYFARE KEEPS A CLOSE EYE ON THE COUNTRY'S HOTTEST COLLECTIBLE ACTION FIGURES. AND, WELL, HERE THEY ARE...

1. LEIA AS JABBA'S PRISONER (STAR WARS: POTF)

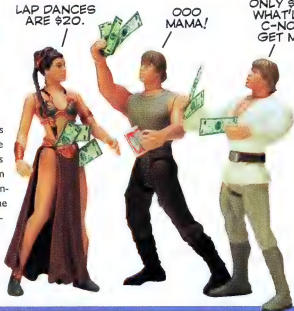

Kenner's attempt to be P.C. here just ain't workin'. "Leia as Jabba's Prisoner"? C'mon, let's just call her Slave Leia and leave it at that. But, putting aside the fact that a) she's misnamed and b) she's a figure fans have been waiting for for about 15 years, where can Kenner go from here? Well, they've already done the three coolest Leias (classic white outfit, Boushh disguise and this bikini version), so who's next? Three words: Spice Girl Leia. Mmmm.

LAP DANCES ARE $20.

OOO MAMA!

ONLY $20? WHAT'LL A C-NOTE GET ME?

2. ROYAL GUARD (STAR WARS: POTF)

These guys did less than Boba Fett in "Return of the Jedi" and they still garner a huge fan following. That's gotta drive George Lucas nuts. He spends millions in creating the Ewoks, works them into the plot as major players with serious screen time and they're universally labeled as giant hairy pieces of garbage who soiled "Jedi" while Fett and the Emperor's Royal Guard—who do little more than sulk as background characters—develop cult followings of millions. That and people won't stop making those "Luke nailed Leia" jokes.

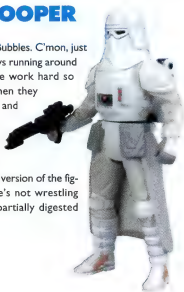

3. HAN SOLO IN BESPIN GEAR (STAR WARS: POTF)

Sooo...this is just regular-vested Han with long sleeves, eh? We dig 'im, though. And the "Empire" scene this toy's pose was modeled after—where Han and company go to dinner only to come face-to-face with Vader & Co.—proved in our minds that NOBODY is cooler than Darth Vader. C'mon, nobody's as quick on the draw as Han and, as fast as he was, our boy Anakin blocked his shots with his nifty mittens, yanked Han's gun out of his hands with the Force and still sat down and had his eats. Now that's macho.

4. SNOWTROOPER (STAR WARS: POTF)

They look like evil Scrubbing Bubbles. C'mon, just picture a dozen of these lil' guys running around your bathtub screaming "We work hard so you don't have toooooo." Then they all get sucked down the drain and die. In other news, how keen is it that Kenner released these guys separate from that Deluxe Snowtrooper from a few months back? At least this version of the figure can stand alone...like he's not wrestling from filling his armor with partially digested Mexican grub. Eww....

5. GRAND MOFF TARKIN (STAR WARS: POTF)

What's the difference between a "Grand" Moff and a regular one? And why did this figure come with a couple of guns instead of that nasty-lookin' Imperial Torture Droid (which, on second thought, he never had anything to do with in the movie but would have been a cool accessory nonetheless). Where were we? Ah yes, Peter Cushing is dead. Shame, seeing how the Tarkin figure—something fandom has been waiting for for 20 years—is one of the best-looking from Kenner's new POTF line. That and he's got swell medals on his chest.

7. GENE SIMMONS (KISS)

That's gotta be a weird feeling. Y'know...having an action figure made of yourself and knowing that thousands of kids across the country are pitting you against Destro, Godzilla and curiously stained sock puppets. We think Gene could take 'em, though. He's not channeling a cutesy kitty cat like Peter, a rejected '60s "Star Trek" villain like Ace or a bored art student like Paul—he's channeling a kick-butt, teeth-grashin' demon! And don't forget, after a life of touring, Gene's unafraid of curious stains!

6. HARLEY QUINN (BATMAN: D.U.O. FORCE)

Finally, some non-Star Wars figures on this list! Hey, don't get us wrong, we like Star Wars as much as the next guy, but c'mon, they've been bullying other toys off this list for the past four months. Now all DC and Kenner have to do is produce a serious line based on DC characters. C'mon, let's see a DC heroes line with super-detailed, highly poseable figures for the JLA, original New Teen Titans, bad guys like Solomon Grundy and the Reverse-Flash. C'mon, take a cue from Toy Biz and give the fans what they want! Oh, and Harley Quinn is a hot figure.

8. PAUL STANLEY (KISS)

The Pauls of the rock 'n' roll world don't get any credit. Paul McCartney co-wrote the greatest library of songs in modern history, but who does everyone worship? John Lennon. The gargantuan talent of Art Garfunkel completely overshadowed his one-time partner, Paul somebody. And when it comes to KISS, who does everyone think of? The blood-barfing guy. And that's why he's behind Gene on this month's list. Get used to it, Star Boy! Get a gimmick. Throw up hamsters or something.

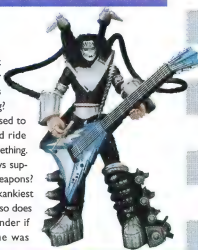

9. PETER CRISS (KISS)

Drummers get even less respect than second-banana guitarists, so Peter's No. 9. When KISS broke up, Pete dropped right off the national radar. There's not much call for a drum-playing guy dressed like a cat. We're guessing he was doing birthday parties and bar mitzvahs to get by. Speaking of cats, they're much dumber than dogs. A dog will fetch a stick, a cat's too stupid. We bet circa 1986, Pete would've fetched a stick for a dollar.

10. ACE FREHLEY (KISS)

Ace was ahead of Peter last month, but we just can't get over that mondo honkin' guitar. How's he supposed to play that thing? Answer: He's not. He's supposed to turn it into a rocket sled and ride around fighting crime. Or something. What exactly are the KISS guys supposed to do with all those weapons? Probably to keep away the skankiest groupies. "Ace, I love you, and so does my acne!! KA-PLOW!!! Wonder if that's what Todd McFarlane was thinkin'...."

Castaway

FROM THE ISLAND OF MISFIT TOYS

HIS CRIME: Existence. He's a dead steer with squid legs and a yak-hair body. Oh, and he has two spines. And a fashionable belt. And as a sidekick, an eight-legged koala. This is what happens when the boss rejects a designer's attempts at a scary monster one too many times, and he comes up with the most ludicrous nonsense he can just to be a jerk. Naturally, the boss loves it. "Eight-legged koala? Norton, you're a genius!"

WHAT?!? WHO?!? HE SAID WHAT?!? THAT'S SELLING FOR HOW MUCH?!? WHEN?!?

SUMMER MOVIE ACTION FIGURES: BOX-OFFICE BOMBS?

By Lars Pearson

You've seen the movie, now experience the toys!

It's a common trend among toy speculators: Watch a movie's sales reports, gauge public opinion and subconsciously judge how the movie's toy line is going to perform. And the practice works—sometimes.

You might expect that major box office successes would also score big in the toy store (assuming there's an action figure license attached), but it's not that simple. A toy's character likeness, gender (you heard right), articulation and price cannot be underestimated, and when considering a line's long-term collectibility, these factors perhaps more than anything can spell retail heaven or hell.

Here's how 1997's movie-tie ins have stacked up so far:

- Batman and Robin—It's easy to forget that Batman characters have a life of their own beyond the comic book and toy industries. Bats is so iconic that even though "Batman and Robin" received scathing reviews and didn't perform as expected, this mattered little to the Kenner toy line. Batman toys have been so hugely successful that the movie simply gave Kenner a catchy theme to base the new toy wave around.

But aside from exceptions such as Batgirl and Poison Ivy (who're surfing high on a wave of demand for female action figures), "Batman and Robin" toys could face a tough time on the after-retail market. Expecting a hit, Kenner flooded the stores with Bat toys, meaning nobody was denied them and the drive among collectors to hunt for them was virtually nil. Despite high demand for the figures, a large supply could hurt their long-term collectibility.

- The Lost World—The second-biggest movie tie-in hit of the year, "Jurassic Park: The Lost World" triumphed for a simple reason: Kids dig dinos. If they're big enough, made well enough and can roar like hell, kids'll buy 'em. But as "Lost World" dinos won praise, their non-dino cousins were left to rot, because as with "Batman and Robin," there was a glut of 'em. Basically, you couldn't spit in most toy stores without hitting a "Lost World" item, and that abundance could mean trouble for the toys in the long term.

- Men in Black—A real odd duck, because whereas "Men in Black" handily trumped "Batman and Robin" at the American box office and became one of the summer's biggest bona fide hits, MiB toys at best did a third of the Batman line's business. Part of the problem was that fans said articulation on the MiB figures wasn't that good—GalooB opted for mechanisms instead—and the figures didn't look a heck of a lot like "MiB" stars Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith. Still, the low-expectation MiB toys were a surprise hit, and the upcoming animated series could spur further sales.

• Steel—Definitely a toy line in which success rested with the movie, because while critics were busy crucifying "Batman and Robin," hardly a breath was uttered about the poorly rated "Steel" starring Shaquille O'Neal as the metal-clad DC Comics character. Many fans claimed the toys were well-articulated and came with good accessories (despite looking little like their DC incarnations)—but it didn't matter. The lack of media attention didn't convince collectors they should give a lick about Steel, and the character's only tenuous link to DC's more-popular Superman (Steel appeared as a replacement for the Man of Steel before graduating to his own comic series) failed to sway many dollars.

• Star Wars—Worth mentioning, since 1997 had the "Star Wars: The Special Edition" films in theatrical release, but this line really doesn't need a movie to fuel it, given the strong collector interest already established 20 years ago. The fact that a whole new generation has turned onto the Force didn't hurt either. Plus, there's just too many cool aliens and too many characters which lend themselves to being bought in multiple quantities (such as the Stormtrooper or Tusken Raider) for the line to be a dud, and they're some of the best-sculpted figures out there, despite having little articulation. Heck, they just look great. In making toy lines strong beyond just being movie tie-ins, toy companies could learn a lot from Kenner and its monster success with Star Wars.

NO PANTS SWAP FOR REBEL TROOPERS

And the official word is: The Rebel Fleet Troopers will keep their pants!

Heaven only knows who instigated the rumor that Kenner was going to change the pants color on the recently released Star Wars: Power of the Force Rebel Fleet Trooper, but it ain't so. It probably started because at the beginning of "Star Wars," those quick-to-die, Swiss-cheesed Troopers are wearing gray pants, but at the movie's end, they're wearing tan pants—the likeness currently captured. Sharp-eyed "Star Wars" viewers might have noticed the discrepancy and given lip service that Kenner was going to switch. Kenner says it has no plans to, meaning tan-pants Fleet Troopers are the norm. Anything away from that is an error, not a variant.

Falshoods like this often crop up, because many toy collectors spend their days hoping, praying, salivating for a toy variant—any toy variant—and the merest hint of one can set the gossip mill churning full force, especially through the Internet and cyberspace. Beware such maybetruths until you've checked and double-checked, as the Fleet Trooper proved.

TF

ToyFare Price Guide Manager Lars Pearson also spurs rumors (and screams) by coming to work pantsless.

HOW TO USE THE TOYFARE PRICE GUIDE

FIRST OFF...

The following 30-odd pages feature the ToyFare Price Guide, the most accurate and up-to-date action figure price guide in the known universe. To insure that it's the most bestest price guide available, we stay in contact with hundreds of retailers throughout the country and regularly send scouts to comic/sci-fi/toy shows to see what the IT buggers are selling for (and which ones are really selling).

But, even with working our fingers to the bone, do keep in mind that a price guide is just that, a GUIDE. Prices most definitely vary depending on local availability and popularity of a figure.

FINDING STUFF...

It's easy, unless you're a cantolope. The price guide is arranged alphabetically by toy lines. Listings for figures related to movie series (i.e. "The Empire Strikes Back"), are posted alphabetically under the original movie title ("Star Wars"). When a title has been used several times for a different line, like Star Wars: Power of the Force, we list all lines chronologically.

Skipping articles "A," "An," and "The" at the beginning of a title, alphabetization is word by word, not letter by letter. So, "The Mask" is listed under "Mask," and "The Tick" is listed under "Tick." "Star Trek: Starfleet Academy" comes before "Star Trek: The Next Generation" because we include the article "The" in alphabetizing when it appears as an interior word in the title. Using the one-word-at-a-time approach, all titles starting with the word "Super," including "Super Amigos," are used up before we go on to titles such as "Superman Animated Series." Abbreviations such as "Dr." will be found before titles starting with "Dragon" but after titles starting with "Doctor." Figures with names beginning with numerals—such as "2-B"—will appear at the top of each listing.

WHY TWO PRICES?

All first-column prices are values for unopened mint figures (MIP, or "Mint in Package"). Second-column prices are for loose mint figures (LM).

Of course, there are all sorts of grades in between, and if you're the anal type, we've diagrammed a few of them to help make things a little easier. Keep in mind this is only a guide, and percentages can vary depending on several factors, including age, supply and demand for the various grades, retailer location, local availability of a figure and its current popularity.

Any new figure that has just been released but hasn't been widely traded yet is marked with **.

WHAT'S WHAT...

An annoyingly in-depth look at grading action figures:

NOTE! Always keep in mind that with unopened toys, it's possible for the toy to have one grade and the packaging another. If a toy is unopened, it's most likely mint, barring toys that were flawed during production. But the packaging might have the tar whipped out of it, and grade in good or fair condition. Many ads will stipulate this, such as "unopened figure in good packaging." There's basically no way we can tell you how to adjust for every grading split—you'll just have to go with your gut and reach an arrangement with the buyer/seller. Got it? Good. Power to da man.

MINT (MIP or "Mint in Package") Packaging: Absolutely perfect. No price tag, no bent corner, no minor crease, no nuthin'. This condition is so smegging amazing, it's scarcer than clothes on Madonnas. Even new toys on the shelves aren't mint most of the time, so you might as well not worry about it. Stuff that is miraculously mint can fetch 125% to 150% of the MIP price depending on desirability and if it was made before 1990. Post-1990, it just fetches the MIP price. Figure: A perfect figure with no sign of usage. Must include every packaged accessory, all in perfect condition and working order. Can also fetch up to 125%-150% of MIP value—again, depending on desirability and if it was made pre-1990.

NEAR MINT (NM) Packaging: Just a notch or two below perfect. Tiny flaws may include a small tear or crease. Normally fetches 100% of the MIP value. Figure: Just about perfect. Minor smudge/color-flaking. All packaged accessories are present (minor smudge/color flaking acceptable) and in working order.

VERY FINE (VF) Packaging: Several minor tears/creases. Usually 75%-80% of MIP value. Figure: More pronounced smudge/color-flaking. All accessories are present with (possible) more pronounced smudges/flaking.

FINE (FW) Packaging: Multiple tears/creases of a more profound nature, possible corners missing/minor writing. Around 40%-50% of MIP value. Figure: Loose joints, heavy smudge/color flaking, may not contain any accessories.

VERY GOOD (VG) Packaging: Major crease/tears, large portions of packaging missing, significant writing/stains. You're looking at 15%-25% of MIP value. Figure: Major discolored areas, "wobbly" body parts, may not contain any accessories.

GOOD (G), FAIR (FR) AND POOR (P) Packaging: Heavily torn/creased/written on to the point of obscurity. Sellers for about 5%-10% of the MIP value. Figure: Major discolored areas, excessively loose body parts, portions of figure may be missing (ponytail, capes, etc.), may not contain any accessories. ■

ToyFare PRICE GUIDE

The toys in this guide are priced as follows: Prices listed on the left are for mint in package (MIP), meaning that the toys have never been removed from their original packaging; items not in any packaging (loose) or missing any of their original accessories vary significantly and are generally lower than the prices listed on the right. A listing marked with a ♦ means that particular figure has not been released yet from the manufacturer. In some cases, these figures are canceled, and thus, never released.

Remember, this is only a guide, and prices can vary for a variety of reasons, including local scarcity.

BIG SHOT

ALIEN & BOWDIE Aliens (Kenner)/X-Men (Toy Biz)

The third "Alien" flick introduced the concept that those nasty acid-bleeding aliens take on some of the properties of their hosts. In fact, the original script for "Alien³" had a bunch more alien/animal hybrids that never made it to the big screen. Instead of letting a good concept go to waste, Kenner ran with this idea to expand their line of action figures. That's where we get creations such as Bull Alien, Killer Crab Alien and Snake Alien. Let's be thankful they stopped there and we never saw Rabid Raccoon Alien or Timtmouse Alien.

BIG SHOT

BLADE-VAMPIRE HUNTER & DRACULA
Spider-Man Animated Series: Vampire Wars (Toy Biz)/Todd
McFarlane's Monsters (McFarlane Toys)

Blade was nothing but a two-bit Marvel character and now he's getting his own action figure line. What gives? Blade flick hits the big screen next February, that's what! Wesley Snipes will star as the vampirous vampire hunter, with Kris Kristofferson and Steven Dorff co-starring. Toy Biz has got an action figure line cooked up that includes some frighteningly realistic likenesses. According to Toy Biz guru Jesse Falco, this is one of his favorite recent lines. And advance buzz has it that the movie ain't half bad either.

ALIEN SUPREME COMMANDER

INDEPENDENCE DAY (TRENDMASTERS)

FIRST APPEARANCE

"Independence Day" (1996)

ORIGIN: Little is known about the unnamed species of aliens that mounted a full-scale invasion of Earth. Their race is technologically advanced, as evidenced by their biomechanical armor and 15-mile-wide destroyer spacecraft. Each ship is outfitted with a fleet of smaller attacker ships and the Schism, a weapon capable of decimating a city. As a species, they are like a force of nature, sweeping over planets in their path and consuming all of the planet's resources before moving on.

CURRENT STATUS: There are plans for a sequel to "Independence Day," so these butt-ugly aliens could be invading again sometime soon.

BEST STUNT: "Independence Day" If you haven't heard of this movie, crawl out from under your rock and get into the real world, loser.

BIG SHOT

JAWAS & ROBBY THE ROBOT

Star Wars P.O.T.F. II (Kenner)

Okay, America doesn't have national health care, hates soccer (the biggest sport in the world) and misses out on all the really cool toys. Have you seen some of these kick-ass Japanese robot figures, all decked-out in tons of sleek armor and big honkin' guns? Unfortunately, these super-keen toys are also super-expensive. Someone has to actually go overseas to pick them up, so that extra cost goes back to you, the consumer. So if you want all the really cool toys, start eating dirt and save up your lunch money, kiddies!

MUG SHOT FIN FANG FOOM

IRON MAN (TOY BIZ)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Strange Tales #89 (October 1961)

ORIGIN: The "dragoon" known as Fin Fang Foom is actually an alien of the Malakian or Kalamathian races. When Fom was first awakened from a centuries-long slumber, he was mistakenly believed by the people of China to be a gigantic 15-story-high dragon. Fin Fang Fom possesses superhuman strength, the power of flight and can produce a combustible acid mist that makes it appear as if he can breathe fire. He can also change his size and shape to resemble a human being.

CURRENT STATUS: Fin Fang Fom was destroyed by the Mandarin's rings, which were amplified by Iron Man's suit of armor.

BEST STORY: Iron #579. The Mildred serpent disguises himself as Fin Fang Fom and battles the God of Thunder.

GALACTUS & EWOKS

Fantastic Four (Toy Biz)/Star Wars: Return of the Jedi (Kenner)

It's pretty nifty that Toy Biz made a Galactus figure as part of their Fantastic Four line, but it would be even niftier if it was in scale with the rest of the Marvel figures. "We've done so many different scales, so it's probably in scale with those little metal guys we did," according to Jesse Falcon at Toy Biz. "If we made him any bigger, we wouldn't have been able to sell it! We made him 14 inches and put a lot of sound and light features into it, which adds to the cost. It could have been bigger, but it would have done less."

THE FREAK

SPAWN (SERIES 6-MCFARLANE TOYS)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Spawn #37 (November 1995)
ORIGIN: The Freak was once a man with the last name Kubiczki, until he went schizophrenic when his wife said she didn't want to have a tedious guy on reality, and that was enough to send him over the edge. Kubiczki left for New York and made his way to Spawn Alley. He encountered Spawn and enlisted his help by convincing him an insane scientist named Doctor Delivium was responsible for his transformation into the Freak. While the Freak does not have any superhuman powers, his insanity sometimes augments his strength and agility.
CURRENT STATUS: The Freak returns in Spawn #38, the final battle for Spawn Alley.
BEST STORY: Spawn #37. The psychotic Freak tricks Spawn into helping him kill an innocent man.

BIG SHOT

MALEBOLGIA & JASON WYNN Spawn (Series 2)/Spawn: The Movie (McFarlane Toys)

What the heck was a big-name actor like Martin Sheen doing in a cheesy comic book flick like "Spawn"? The story goes that Sheen took the role of bad-guy Jason Wynn because his grandson is such a huge Spawn fan. Sheen also lent his likeness to the Wynn figure in the accompanying toy line, making it the first Martin Sheen action figure. Just repaint your Blob toy to look like grotesquely obese acting legend Marion Brando and you're all set to re-enact scenes from "Apocalypse Now." If only they'd make some "Godfather" action figures...

MUG SHOT GHOST RIDER

FIRST APPEARANCE: Ghost Rider #71 (second series—May 1990)

ORIGIN: While eroding the minions of the evil Deathwatch, who wounded his sister, teenager Daniel Ketch stumbled upon a mysterious motorcycle in a cemetery. When he placed his hand upon the gas cap, he found himself transformed into Ghost Rider, the living spirit of vengeance.

With his flaming skull head, enchanted chain and supernatural powers, the Ghost Rider can cause severe pain to those who have done wrong.

CURRENT STATUS: Check out Marvel's weekly monthly Ghost Rider comic, even though you'll probably regret it.

BEST STORY: Ghost Rider #25-#27 (second series) and J-Men #5. Ghost Rider teams up with the mutant heroes to fight a bunch of nasty Brood aliens in New Orleans.

BIG SHOT

I'M ABOUT TO TAKE A GIGANTIC BOWEL MOVEMENT ON THAT IMPERIAL WALKER!

GODZILLA

Godzilla, King of the Monsters (Trendmasters)

He's big, green and really pissed off. He's Godzilla, and he just doesn't get the respect the king of monsters deserves. But that's all about to change on Memorial Day 1998. Dean Devlin and Roland Emmerich, the team behind the blockbuster movie "Independence Day" are gearing up for a new Godzilla movie to start off next year's crop of big budget extravaganzas. Will their "Godzilla" be worth it? Sure, "104" made tons of money, but this is the team that also made "Stargate" and "Universal Soldier". Can you say "schlock artists"?

GHOUL

ULTRAFORCE (GALLOBS)
FIRST APPEARANCE: Exiles #1 (first series—August 1993)
ORIGIN: Ghoul is an alien, or superpowered human, who can be torn to pieces and brought back to life from organic material. He also has the ability to talk to the dead and can sometimes see other people's deaths. Ghoul was originally a founding member of the Exiles supergroup, until he sacrificed himself to kill the villainous Malcolm Kent. Ghoul's restorative powers kicked in, and he soon became a founding member of Ultraforce in order to save the life of the young ultra Pica and convince her to leave the team.

CURRENT STATUS: Like the rest of the Ultraforce, Ghoul is currently in limbo after Malibu Comics was bought and absorbed by Marvel.
BEST STORY: Exiles #4 (first series). Ghoul is seemingly destroyed when he's caught in an exploding building.

MUG SHOT GORN CAPTAIN

STAR TREK (PLAYMATES)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Star Trek" episode "Arena" (January 19, 1967)

ORIGIN: The Gorn are a race of intelligent, 7-foot-tall reptilian aliens with iridescent eyes and a warlike nature. Enterprise Captain James T. Kirk encountered the Gorn when they destroyed a base on Cestus III over a border dispute. The Enterprise killed the Gorn ship, but both were caught by an advanced race called Metrons. Kirk and the Gorn ship captain were put on an asteroid by the Metrons and made to fight to the death.

CURRENT STATUS: Since the encounter at Cestus III, the Gorn have resolved to communicate with the Federation to avoid further violence.

BEST STORY: "Arena." This classic Trek episode is one of the best and is available on home video.

BIG SHOT

PONDA BABA Star Wars P.O.T.F. II (Kenner)

Star Wars geeks are drooling en masse with the announcement that there will be a Bespin Luke Skywalker figure with a removable hand. But Kenner's done two versions of Ponda Baba (that walrus guy who gets his arm hacked off by Ben Kenobi), both of which don't have a removable arm. According to Kenner, that's a little too grisly for an action figure. So...it's okay to lop a blond pretty-boy's hand off, but we can't touch a belligerent, ugly alien with a mouth that looks like an ass? For God's sake, what kind of lessons are we teaching our children???

BIG SHOT

GORE & GALACTUS

Total Chaos (Series I-McFarlane Toys)/
Fantastic Four (Toy Biz)

If you call yourself a fan of McFarlane Toys, you probably already know that Gore was pulled from the Total Chaos line. But didja know there's also a reprint of everybody's favorite mutant buccaneer? "Total Chaos also described the paint jobs as much as it described anything else," claims McFarlane Toys Collector's Club Director Chet Jacques. Gore's original paint scheme wasn't quite right, so a second edition with green tarnished highlights was produced. Both were shipped in equal quantities, but Gore is still the rarest McFarlane figure.

BIG SHOT

BY THE GODDESS! TRAPPED IN THESE MUPPET INHIBITORS, MY FELLOW X-MEN AND I ARE HELPLESS!

RHAAAA!

AH! LL NEVAH "CRUNCH" BE ABLE T'ELL "MUNCH-MUNCH" REMY HOW AH "CRUNCH" FEEL!

THE OL' CANUCKLEHEAD NEVER WANTED TO GO OUT LIKE THIS...

THE PROTECTOR

X-Men: Generation X (Toy Biz)

The second wave of Toy Biz's Generation X figures includes the Protector, a character who was originally called Orphan-Maker in the comic books. Why was his name changed? "Any mother that walks into a store and sees a toy named Orphan-Maker—that's probably a definite no-sell," claims Toy Biz's Jesse Falcon. Any chance of seeing characters with controversial names in a line strictly for collectors? "Probably not. We still have to sell to the same national toy stores, no matter if it's marketed to kids or adults."

MALEBOLGIA

SPAWN (SERIES 2—MCFARLANE TOYS)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Spawn #1

(May 1992)

ORIGIN: Malebolgia's the grand peacock of Hell. Back when he was first created over 70 millennia ago, Malebolgia was the pet of Leviathan, who happened to be ruler of Hell at the time. Shortly after he was born, Malebolgia destroyed his master and ascended to the throne, where he has remained since.

Of today's big jabs in to trick souls into thinking they can return to Earth to be with their loved ones. When they find themselves reborn, they discover that they've become a hideously deformed Hellspawn.

CURRENT STATUS: Check out Curse of the Spawn #15, a special issue focusing on Malebolgia.

BEST STORY: Spawn #8. Check out this issue of Spawn written by Alan Moore for an all-expense-paid trip through the depths of Hell.

BIG SHOT

TELL ME ABOUT THE RABBITS, GEORGE...

4-LOM & ZUCKUSS

Star Wars: P.O.T.F. II/Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back (Kenner)

For the last time, let's get this one straight. Back in 1980, Kenner made a little boo-boo in their line of figures from "The Empire Strikes Back" and reversed the names of bounty hunters 4-LOM and Zuckuss. Who can blame them? These poor schleps were on screen for a total of 30 seconds and they didn't even have any dialogue. With their new line of Star Wars figures, Kenner has fixed that little oversight, so now all you Star Wars geeks can sleep at night. That way, you can get up early and go to the toy store and buy up all the new action figures.

MAN-BAT

BATMAN: THE ANIMATED SERIES (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Batman: The Animated Series" episode "Do Leather Wings"

ORIGIN: King Langstrom worked as a zoologist at the Gotham City Zoo and was in search of a formula to replicate a bat's long life. Langstrom decided to try the formula out on himself, and was transformed into the Man-Bat, a creature more animal than human. The authorities confused Batman with the Man-Bat when the creature first ransacked Gotham, but the Dark Knight was able to administer an antidote to Langstrom and clear his name.

Langstrom, however, has been re-infected on numerous occasions.

CURRENT STATUS: The new "Batman" cartoon airs weekly on the WB network.

BEST STORY: "Terror in the Sky" A man-sized bat terrorizes Gotham, but Langstrom claims he's innocent. Who could it be?

GRIMLOCK & SNARL Transformers (Series 2-Hasbro)

Hasbro's enormously successful Transformers line was actually based on a bunch of different Japanese toys. The first few Transformers waves were merely redecoed versions of these toys, but Hasbro created their own when they ran out of Japanese figures. Metal parts were often used to make these new Transformers blend in with Japanese counterparts, but as the line went on, the Transformers weren't able to hold on to their popularity and metal pieces were dropped in favor of cost-cutting plastic parts.

MUG SHOT

MOJO

X-MEN/FORCE (TOY BIZ)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Longshot

#3 (November 1985)

ORIGIN: The otherdimensional slave dealer and movie producer known as Mojo is one of the Spineless Ones, a select group of a race of spineless semi-humanoid beings. The Spineless Ones engineered the creation of a race of slaves with the appearance of what they consider to be devils, but are actually very similar to human beings. One of Mojo's slaves, Longshot, engineered a slave revolt and fled to Earth. Mojo sent Spiral and others to follow him, and Mojo soon joined them when he realized Earth's humans are a good source of slaves.

CURRENT STATUS: When last seen, Mojo was hanging out on Mojoworld.

DEBUT STORY: X-Men Annual #10. Mojo turns the X-Men into the cats of X-Babies.

BIG SHOT

SKULLFIRE, SPIDER-MAN 2099 & JUNKPILE X-Men 2099/Amazing Spider-Man (Toy Biz)

Marvel's line of 2099 comic books came and went and so did Toy Biz's accompanying action figures. Spider-Man 2099 and the future version of the X-Men got their shot at action figures in '95 and '96, but the recent Hulk: Transformations line included Hulk 2099. Does the Biz plan on visiting the Marvel Universe of the future any time soon? "I would say it's pretty dead," says Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon. "It had a lot of potential but Marvel unfortunately never went anywhere with it. But we had a lot of fun doing the figures."

MUG SHOT

SUGAR MAN

X-MEN MUTANT MONSTERS (TOY BIZ)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Generation Next #2 (April 1995)

ORIGIN: Sugar Man was an evil, seductive terrorist in an alternate universe created when the mutant Legion went back in time and accidentally killed Professor Xavier, when the so-called "Age of Apocalypse" ended. Sugar Man was able to pass over into our reality through the X-Men Crystal. The four-suited monster likes to dine on people and is the subject of many children's nightmares. Sugar Man lives in a series of underground caves and searches out subjects for his twisted experiments.

CURRENT STATUS: After his plans to return to the Age of Apocalypse were thwarted, Sugar Man was once again stranded in our reality.

BEST STORY: "X-Men 3: Sugar Man tries to harness the mutant population of Genosha to open a portal back to the Age of Apocalypse."

Transformers: Beast Wars (Kenner)/Transformers (Series 2-Hasbro)

Hasbro's Transformers just keep going and going. The line originally died out in 1990, only to come back two years later as Transformers: Generation 2. When it looked like that line was about to die a quick death, it was turned into Transformers Beast Wars, a totally new concept featuring robots that change into various prehistoric beasts. Call us a bunch of old fuddy-duddies, but we prefer the original Transformers any day. Nothing against the Beast Wars stuff, we just think cars look a whole lot cooler. Vroom vroom!!!

VAMPIRE

FIRST APPEARANCE: Networks #1 (June 1994)
ORIGIN: The Vampire Nation is one of the Night Tribes, whose goal is to get revenge on the human population that forced them into hiding by enslaving them and festering upon their flesh. Members of the Vampire Nation frequently enter the "fronzy," a bloodstain that doesn't end until warm blood is consumed. Vampire drones can only be destroyed by a stake through the heart, behaving as direct sunlight.
CURRENT STATUS: The Vampire Nation is still making things rough for the Networks team in the monthly Networks series. Check out November's Networks #35, the conclusion of the saga begun in Networks #1.
BEST STORY: Networks Rebirth. This trade paperback reprints the first three issues of Networks, where the team battles a bunch of vampires.

GRAND MOFF TARKIN & FRANKENSTEIN PLAYSET
Star Wars: P.O.T.F. II (Kenner)/Todd
McFarlane's Monsters (McFarlane Toys)

Everybody's going hog-wild over Kenner's new Grand Moff Tarkin figure. Up on the big screen, Tarkin was played by Peter Cushing, who had quite a career before he took the role of that meanie who barked orders to Darth Vader. Cushing died in 1995 at age 81, but before "Star Wars," he made a name for himself with roles in countless horror films like "The Curse of Frankenstein" and "The Horror of Dracula." You might have also caught Cushing in the classic "backwards" scene with Val Kilmer in "Top Secret."

WAMPA

STAR WARS: THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "The Empire Strikes Back" (1980)
ORIGIN: The ice planet of Hoth is home to the Wampa, a ferocious, carnivorous beast with white fur, yellow eyes and a howl that is indistinguishable from the planet's winds. Its howl fur allows it to blend in with the surrounding snowy landscape and sneak up on its prey, which it brings back to huge caves carved on the ice. Several Wampas organized the Rebel Alliance when they made their secret base on Hoth.

CURRENT STATUS: The Wampa that attacked Luke Skywalker was de-armored, but presumably there are tons more of the nasty beasts all over the planet Hoth.
BEST STORY: The Empire Strikes Back Special Edition. Go read (or buy) this movie to see some extra scenes of the vicious Wampa.

BIG SHOT

PSYCHO MAN, DR. DOOM & LEADER Fantastic Four/Incredible Hulk Smash N Crash (Toy Biz)

Check this one out. Toy Biz and the defunct Mego Corp. might have pulled off one of the first action figure crossovers. Back in the late 70s, Mego produced the Micronauts, modular robot warriors with interchangeable parts. The Micronauts even had their own Marvel comic where they sometimes fought Psycho Man, one of the Fantastic Four's foes. So when Toy Biz made their Psycho Man action figure, they inadvertently made one of the "lost" Micronauts characters. See what happens when you think about action figures too much?

TOYING AROUND

GUEST COLUMN

MONSTER MANIA

All photos: Paul Schreiff

Brian Pulido
Publisher, Chaos! Comics

When I was a kid, all I ever wanted was monster action figures and other cool, creepy stuff. But toys like that were few and far between. The toy store shelves were cluttered by those pesky heroic Mego 8-inch action figures and G.I. Joe—all goody two shoes, nice guys in spandex. What was a self-respecting child of darkness to do? Sure, we had those cool Aurora model kits and Planet of the Apes dolls (ironically, a Mego product), but I really wanted some weird monsters with which to attack the goody-goody heroes, freak out the girls in the neighborhood and generally bother my parents. People said I was "strange" and "different." Actually, I was just ahead of my time.

Cut to the present-day, 25 years later. Have you noticed the toys these days? Amid the countless Star Wars and Star Trek figures are the dark, foreboding creatures of the night I've always longed for. They're infecting the shelves, dominating them. Every day, action figures are looking more and more creepy, evil and gross. With realistic bloody decoes, severed limbs and demonic leers, they're everything your parents don't want you to have.

Glorious, isn't it?

Now we can play out twisted fantasies armed with our super-cool Todd McFarlane's Monsters line, an assortment that has to be among the coolest toys ever produced. I'm sure the original movie Frankenstein, Boris Karloff, would be proud of McFarlane Toys' gory likeness—right down to the interchangeable brain! And think of the play possibilities: Frankenstein vs. the Borg (Try assimilating the undead, ya cyborg freak!). The Werewolf vs. Luke Skywalker (Luke'd be disemboweled long before he could activate his lightsaber!). And if you add some mud and insects (real live ones, mind you), the whole thing would take on a new, demented dimension.

How about the insane Spawn toys themselves? I have to give the mighty Todd McFarlane a ton of credit for making gross stuff cool. His company single-handedly raised the bar on monster action figures. Think about it. Maleboggia is the Devil, man—yet we can buy him in Kmart. If those guys only knew what they were selling...

Even Toy Biz is flipping out with their X-Men: Monster Armor and Spider-Man Vampire Wars lines, featuring truly mutated mutants and blood-suckers like Morbius. It's all good, creepy stuff.

And now after dreaming about it for years, my own Chaos! Comics characters are coming to life as action figures from the supremely-talented Clayburn Moore and Moore Action Collectibles. Right after Halloween, you'll be able to play with the likes of Evil Ernie, Lady Death, Purgatori and Lady Demon. I know I will.

Imagine the battle royal of the monster toy lines: Chaos! Figure Assortment One vs. The Universal Monsters; Evil Ernie vs. Spawn or Jack Skellington from "Tim Burton's Nightmare Before Christmas"; Lady Death vs. Angela. Parents will have to pry the figures from kids' hands at bedtime.

Make no mistake: It's the golden age of monsters. A ghoulish good time is in store for all. TF

Chaos! Comics Publisher Brian Pulido still freaks out neighborhood girls...cept those with restraining orders.
